PREFACE.

In writing the History and Genealogy of the Macy Family the author confines himself to the American branches only. He wishes to take this opportunity to express his gratitude to those members of the family and others who have so kindly assisted him in collecting information. Although he has spared no effort to secure accuracy and completeness, it is more than possible there may be some errors as to names and dates, for which he craves due indulgence, as he has labored under many disadvantages, one of the greatest of which has been the neglect of some branches of the family in keeping a correct record of births, marriages and deaths. Another and perhaps more serious obstacle has been the indifference shown by many, who have not even furnished the facts in relation to their immediate family, which has been obtained from other sources, and therefore may be incomplete. A difference may be discovered in some of the early dates, which can only be explained as follows: Our Puritan forefathers, in their desire to do away with everything that in any manner appertained to the popish times or was of heathenish origin, changed the time of the commencement of the year from the first of January to the 25th of March, and kept all their records by numbers instead of names of months; for instance, their first month was March, and many of the early town records of this country are marked thus: Twelfth mo $163\frac{4}{5}$, meaning either February the twelfth month 1634, or February the second month 1635. Again, the Society of Friends, of which the great majority of the Macy family have been members since the beginning of the eighteenth century, used numbers instead of names to designate days and months, calling January the first month, February the second month, etc. It is therefore readily perceived, in receiving records kept by some of the earlier members of the family, where the date was in numbers the difficulty in deciding whether first month meant January or March; the following plan has therefore been adopted. Where it is not positively known whether the date was in the Puritan, Friends, or present style, the latter has been selected.

MACY GENEALOGY.

From the earliest records of civilization, religion has been the greatest power on earth; a mighty uncompromising potentate, conquering with a two-edged sword, but holding its captives with a silken cord. Its throne is the human mind; its power and strength the immortal soul. Since the Christian era, we have a more perfect record of its influence. It has thrown out its tendrils, entwining every member of the body politic, until within its all-powerful grasp, the destinies of nations have been rocked and swayed. Its movements are as varied as its power is great. It sheathes and unsheathes the sword. It binds nation to nation, and at its bid, continents tremble with the shock of contending hosts. It raises rulers among the people, and anon, thrones are undermined, and, tottering, fall.

During the middle ages, western Europe was subject to spasmodic religious revivals. The clergy kindled from the altars the fires of a holy enthusiasm, and the cry "To Jerusalem! To Jerusalem!" echoing from hill-top to mountain-top, called the masses to weary pilgrimages and crusades against infidels. With their swords at their sides, and their spears in their rests, the high and the low, the lord and the slave, mingled together on foot, actuated by the same holy desire, to rid the earth of unbelievers. Love of arms contributed greatly to this intense religious fervor. With blind enthusiasm, perseverance, and long-suffering endurance, they followed the banner of the cross, yielding to it a knightly loyalty; a loyalty which renders their history a lofty epic, and furnishes later days with examples of chivalric devotion. The close of the crusades against the Mussulmen in the sixteenth century, left Europe in a fitting state for the rapidly approaching reformation. The reformation was of no sudden growth. During the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, the public discussion of various religious topics by ecclesiastics, and good and pious men, had brought them unwittingly to the idea of emancipation from the tyranny of their spiritual oppressors. To discard the priest, and bring the disciple into direct communion with Christ, was the fundamental principle of their action. Each generation added in passing to the number of reformers, until Pope Leo X, driven by the necessities of an impoverished exchequer, offered to the devotees of the Church of Rome, unlimited indulgences. The hour had come for the first great manifestation of resistance to the priestly laws; the issue was made, and Martin Luther stood before the world the apostle and champion of the reformation. An Austin friar, a doctor of laws in the University of Wittemberg, a close reasoner, and above all a man of intense convictions, he seemed formed by Providence for his great work. The pope's bull of excommunication, with the canon law, and many of the tracts of his opponents were publicly burned. The sparks from that fire ignited the whole of Europe, and from its ashes, rose up Protestantism. Following Martin Luther in Germany, came John Calvin in France, while converts to the new faith were not wanting in any town, village or hamlet throughout Europe. The pope's refusal, in the early part of the century, to grant to Henry VIII, a divorce from Queen Catherine, and to sanction his union with Anne Boleyn, induced that monarch to declare himself free from the jurisdiction of Rome, and parliament in 1534, conferred on him the title of "The Supreme head of the Church of England on earth." The differences between Henry and Clement were purely of a temporal nature; but the result opened the door more readily for the reformers in England. Henry commenced his leadership of the Church of England, by punishing all those who dared to doubt his supreme authority, whether Protestants or Catholics. This action tended to open the eyes of the people. Upon the death of Henry and the succession to the throne of Edward VI, Cranmer and his followers found flocking to the standard of the reformed Church, many who before had not dared to avow their belief for fear of punishment. During the brief life of this boy-king, the affairs of the realm were controlled by sixteen executors named by his father. Of these, first in power and influence was Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, a leader of the reformation. Edward died in 1553, when his sister Mary assumed the reins of government. Her reign was a sad impediment to the progress of the good cause, for she ardently espoused the interests of the Church of Rome, and endeavored, though with ill success, to reestablish the authority of the pope. The year 1556 added the illustrious names of Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, to the growing catalogue of martyrs. During the entire progress of the reformation, its followers were deemed heretics by the Catholics. As such, they were persecuted, driven from their homes, thrown into prison, broken on the wheel, burned at the stake; in fine, made to suffer all the tortures which an educated cruelty could suggest, and a fiendish hatred execute. While martyrs in countless numbers were baptizing the soil of England with their blood, in France, the Huguenots, the followers of John Calvin, were being massacred and exiled from their homes and country. No country, no spot where the new faith had been promulgated, can furnish any contrast to the mournful story of the English reformation.

High hopes and bright prospects for freedom and happiness, filled the hearts of the people, when England's crown was placed upon Elizabeth's head. Though a Catholic in habit, she soon commenced to drop Romish forms and ceremonies, and gradually assumed those of the Protestant church, until conversion rendered complete the change. The fact was hailed with joy by the exiled, who flocked back to their native land. But to their sorrow, they found lurking in the Church of England, customs and observances which suggested Rome to their purified minds, and the curtain falls upon the reign of Elizabeth, with the Protestants and Puritans fiercely contending around a trembling and divided church.

When James I came upon the throne of England, in 1603, the Puritans were being harrassed by oppressive laws and were being persecuted by the Protestants with almost as much severity as the Protestants had been persecuted by the Catholics. One John Robinson, who was the leader of a Puritan church, advocated the removal of his congregation to Holland, where they were promised religious freedom. And in 1608, Robinson and his entire congregation removed to Amsterdam, where they were unmolested in their worship. They were Englishmen, and the innate love of country was strong within them; they longed to see her enlightened upon religion, so that they once more might either tread their native soil or have England's flag their flag, and England's government their government. It was therefore resolved after much fasting and prayer to emigrate to America, where they were assured they could worship according to the dictates of their own conscience and yet be under the guardian care of England. They made all their arrangements to embark for that land of promise and sailed from Holland on the 21st of July, 1620 on board the Speedwell, for Southampton, England. A few days before sailing — on a day of fasting and prayer — Robinson, who was to remain in Holland with part of the congregation, preached to them a sermon full of Christian liberty so different from what might be expected in the age of bigotry in which he lived. His text was Ezra, chap. viii, v. 21. "I proclaimed a fast there at the river Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance." "Brethren," said he, "we are now quickly to part from one another, and whether I may ever live to see your face on earth any more, the God of heaven only knows; but whether the Lord hath appointed that or not, I charge you before God and his blessed angels, that you follow me no farther than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ. If God reveal anything to you, by any other instrument of his, be as ready to receive it, as ever you were to receive any truth by my ministry; for I am verily persuaded — I am very confident, that the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of his holy word. For my part I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the reformed churches who are come to a period in religion, and will go at present no farther than the instruments of their reformation. The Lutherans cannot be drawn to go beyond what Luther saw: whatever part of his will our good God has revealed to Calvin, they will rather die than embrace it. And the Calvinists you see stick fast where they were left by that great man of God, who yet saw not all things. This is a misery much to be lamented, for though they were burning and shining lights in their times, yet they penetrated not into the whole counsel of God; but were they now living, would be as willing to embrace farther light, as that which they first received. I beseech you, remember it is an article of your church covenant, "that you be ready to receive whatever truth shall be made known to you from the written word of God." Remember that, and every other article of your sacred covenant. But I must here withal exhort you to take heed what you receive as truth. Examine it, consider it, and compare it with other scriptures of truth, before you receive it, for it is not possible that the Christian world should come so lately out of such thick anti-Christian darkness, and that perfection of knowledge should break forth at once. I must also advise you to abandon, avoid, and shake off the name of Brownist. It is a mere nick-name, and a brand for the making religion and the professors of it odious to the Christian world." These early Puritans never undertook anything even of a secular nature without first praying to God to guide their steps aright. During their residence in Holland they had endeared themselves to the inhabitants by their quiet, peaceable habits, industry and frugality, and by their sincere devotion to their religion; so that when they set sail it drew tears from the eyes of the Dutch, who felt they were parting from brothers instead of strangers who had been sojourning with them but a few years. The Speedwell arrived safely at Southampton and her passengers were transferred to the May-flower, which vessel sailed finally on the 21st of August, 1620, for America, the number of her passengers being increased by additions at Southampton until it numbered one hundred souls.

On the 21st of December, 1620, these wanderers landed at Plymouth in America, and there with bended knee breathed forth their prayers of thankfulness to Heaven for their prosperous voyage and their safe deliverance from the storms and dangers of the ocean on the shores of, to them, the promised land, little thinking that they were laying a foundation upon which would rise up a people that would throw off the yoke of royal sovereignty, defy parliament, and build thereon the mightiest republic on earth.

The pilgrim fathers of the May-flower had been educated by necessity and from religious convictions to habits of industry, simplicity and frugality, which proved so conducive to happiness and prosperity in their new homes. The news of their successful landing, of the delightful climate, of the luxurious growth of vegetation, and above all of their being untrammeled by any sectarian creed, and at full liberty to worship God as they pleased, soon reached their native land; and their friends rapidly flocked hither to join them from all parts of England. We find from the early records of many of the New England towns, that a goodly number of their early settlers were from Wiltshire, England. Wiltshire is one of the southern counties of England, and has always been an agricultural district. The farmers, or as they were more frequently designated, planters, raised principally wheat and barley; those in the north of Wiltshire, in addition, paid much attention to raising cattle, and those in the south to raising sheep. The manufacture of cheese was an important item and was very extensively carried on, and to the present day they retain their celebrity, the Wiltshire cheese being universally known. The town of Salisbury, the capital of the county, situated on the river Avon, 82 miles W. S. W. from London, was once famous for the manufacture of woolen goods, but that day has long since passed. Near this town, in the parish of Chilmark, resided, prior to his embarkation for America, Thomas Macy, our ancestor.

It is greatly to be regretted that we have no record of the name of the vessel in which he crossed the Atlantic, or of the exact date of his arrival, and also whether any other member or members of the family came with him. It is doubtful whether the name of the vessel will ever be obtained, as many records have been searched within the past year to establish that fact without satisfactory results. As to the date of the arrival of Thomas Macy in this country it was probably in the year 1635, but certainly not later than 1639; and it is equally probable that one or more members of his family came with him. Though of one fact we are certain, Thomas Macy was the fountain head of the Macy family in this country, none other of that name having any male descendant. It may not be uninteresting to many to know what record we have of one other by the name of Macy who early settled in this country.

Taunton, Mass., was settled in 1638 (though the first, or Titequet Purchase, was made in 1637), and its list of first purchasers stand in the following order:

George Macy appears to have been one of the prominent men in the settlement of Taunton. He was elected deputy to represent Taunton at general court in 1672, 1674, 1675, 1676, 1677, and 1686, and most probably served every year from 1672, to 1686, but the foregoing dates are the only ones found. In 1643, there were 54 persons in Taunton between the ages of 16 and 60, subject to military duty, and the name of George Macy appears amongst the number. He was a lieutenant during the Philip war. He died Aug. 17th, 1693, leaving no sons but several daughters. One daughter was probably Elizabeth, who married John Hodges, May 15th, 1672; and another, Hannah, married James Blake Feb. 6th, 1681; and another, Rebecca, who married Benjamin Williams, March 18th, 1690. We find the name of Samuel Macy amongst the inhabitants of Taunton in 1668, and we find no farther record of him; it is therefore reasonable to suppose he was a son of George Macy, but died single prior to 1693, the time of his father's death. The only link obtained wherein there is any reason for supposing him to be a relation to Thomas Macy other than the fact of their being the only two persons as heads of families by the name of Macy in this country at that time, is the following letter. This letter was written by a committee appointed by the town of Taunton in response to an invitation to the inhabitants to take up their abode at Barnstable, Sandwich, Yarmouth, and Eastham (towns on Cape Cod), during the continuance of the Philip war. The letter was probably written in 1677, and the committee consisted of Richard Williams, Walter Deane, George Macy, and William Hawey, and they wrote: "We bless God that he hath given us so much room in your hearts, that you so freely tender to us a part with you in your houses, fields, and provisions, at such a time, when the Lord is threatening us with the bereavement of our own. It much comforteth us in this day of darkness and distress, we shall want no succor you are able to afford us. We therefore return you all serious thanks for your sincere and abundant love, beseeching the Lord to continue and increase your peace, and ability, and promptness to relieve the distresses in this evil day. Nevertheless, upon our serious and mature deliberation upon, and consideration of, your great offer, we cannot, at present, comply with a motion to remove and quit our places, and leave our habitations to be a desolation, and that because we fear we should in so doing be wanting to the name of God, and the interest of Christ, in this place, and bewray much diffidence and cowardice, and give the adversary occasion to triumph over us, to the reproach of that great and fearful name of God, that is called on us." The above named towns on Cape Cod are located very near together and are the nearest points on the main land to the island of Nantucket, at which place Thomas Macy was at this time residing, and was connected by marriage with many families on the cape. The first positive record we have of Thomas Macy in this country is when he was made a freeman[1] y^e^ 6 day y^e^ 7^th^ month (September), 1639, at Newbury, Mass. No person was qualified to vote until he took the freeman's oath. Newbury was first settled in 1635, but the list of names of the first settlers is very incomplete, therefore we can only assume it as reasonable that he resided here some time prior to his taking the freeman's oath in September, 1639, particularly as the records show that many persons lived here several years before taking said oath.

The population of Newbury increasing rapidly, quite a number of the inhabitants concluded to move a short distance off, where it was not so thickly populated; which project they carried out in 1639, and settled at a place which they called Salisbury, after Salisbury in England. The following list of the first settlers of Salisbury may be found interesting:

We find Thomas Macy frequently held positions of honor and trust in the new settlement; he was a merchant, a planter, one of the select men of the town, a juryman, and withal a preacher. He was of the Baptist persuasion, and would frequently on the Sabbath exhort the people. The following extracts from the Salisbury Records give some few incidents of his life:

Hundreds of thousands of people throughout the middle, southern and western states, look back to New England as the birth-place of their ancestors. They turn their thoughts towards it with just and unfeigned pride as the great nursery of American skill and enterprise, and they cannot but look towards it with feelings of reverence as the cradle in which American Independence was rocked, and the ground upon which it proclaimed its manhood. And upon many a sacred spot in those New England states did our forefathers stand side by side and shoulder to shoulder, and defend and maintain that glorious manhood which has been transmitted as an inheritance to the present generation. The virtues of New England have not been confined within the borders of this great country, now washed by the Atlantic and Pacific, but their influence is being felt by every country on the face of the earth. Many of her sons have navigated the trackless ocean, ploughing through the mighty waters, fearlessly contending with howling storms and raging tempests, until, with their hereditary indomitable will and unconquerable perseverance, they have traversed every quarter of the globe and scattered broadcast the seeds of her industrial institutions, which have not only taken root, but have grown, blossomed and brought forth fruit: the results of which, through the thousand channels of commerce, have wended their way back to enrich not only New England but this entire country.

She has brought forth warriors and statesmen whose names are indelibly engraved upon her monument of greatness; she has had her Greene, her Putnam, her Franklin, her Adams, her Everett and her Webster.

But with all her power and all her greatness she has a bar upon her escutcheon which time never can efface and history never forget. It was her religious persecution and fanaticism. No sooner had our Pilgrim fathers found themselves free from the religious oppressions of their native land, than they assumed the right to dictate, and usurped the power to say which was the true church, and to condemn the unbelievers. The followers of George Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends in England, fled to this country that they too might enjoy religious freedom; but no sooner did they arrive here than they were branded by the Puritan clergy as witches, heretics, and of being possessed of the devil. And the heart-rending cruelties of the reformation were reenacted. The people derisively called the Friends, Quakers, and every one appearing in the plain and simple garb of a Friend was immediately subjected to every possible indignity; nor were women or children spared. Women and young girls were stripped to the waist and lashed in the public squares until the blood flowed to the very ground, they unflinchingly suffered their ears to be cut off, unmercifully were they tied to the tails of carts and dragged through the streets, and with an unfaltering step and a quiet, serene countenance did both men and women ascend the scaffold and there render up their lives, without a reproach upon their lips; and for what? for the sake of their religion. The sufferings and persecutions of the early Friends is a sad history, and in reviewing the history of New England we approach this period with feelings of both regret and gratification. Regret, that such dark days should ever have hung over New England; gratification, that she has thrown off that mantle of darkness and has secured to her people unlimited religious liberty.

This subject, the persecution of Friends, was not touched upon without great reluctance in this work, but as it exercised so much influence over the actions of our ancestors it became necessary. In the years 1656 and 1657, many laws were passed in Massachusetts detrimental, not only to the liberty of those professing the belief in the doctrines as promulgated by the Society of Friends, but to their lives also. One law, was banishing all Friends or Quakers from Massachusetts, prohibiting them from returning under penalty of death; another, was imposing a fine upon any one who should harbor or entertain any one of the sect, giving the court permission to impose additional penalties should it see fit so to do. Still another law was passed making it a misdemeanor for any one to preach to the people on the Sabbath except regularly ordained ministers of the church. This latter law was made to restrain Joseph Peasley and Thomas Macy[1] from exhorting the people on the Sabbath in the absence of a minister. It appears that in 1657 the inhabitants of Salisbury were somewhat divided upon the subject of religion, many upholding the doctrines of Joseph Peasley a Baptist, but the larger portion indorsing those of William Worcester of the old Puritan church. The former petitioned to have the town divided; the latter remonstrated against it, contending they required the support of the entire town to sustain their minister. These petitions were submitted to the general court in May 1658. The court decided that the town should not be divided, and that all the inhabitants should attend the old meeting and pay their proportion towards the support of the minister, Mr. Worcester. This order many of the inhabitants refused to obey, and in October we find the following: "This court hath been fully informed that Joseph Peaslee and the rest of the inhabitants have slighted and neglected the order of this court, it is therefore ordered by authority of this court that the recorder for the county of Suffield issue his warrant requiring Joseph Peaslee, Thomas Macy and all the rest of the inhabitants of the new towne, being masters of families, to make their appearance before the county court to be held at Salisbury to answer for their disobedience in not complying with the said order and the said county court is hereby empowered, authorized and required to proceed against all such of them as by their appearance shall not make it clear that they have seen this order, performed their duty and repaired to the public worship of God on the Lord's day at the old towne to fine them for every days absence 5 shillings." This order passed on the 26th of October, 1658; on the 29th of same month another order passed "that Joseph Peaslee and Thomas Macy do appear before the general court to answer for their disorderly practices."

Thomas Macy was a man of great energy and determined will, and evidently came to the conclusion that he would not submit to the bigoted laws of the rulers who were entirely governed by the clergy if it were possible to find a place where religion was not a sin unless observed according to the views and doctrines of the majority of the Pilgrims. His mind being engaged with this idea it is easily understood why, in the early part of 1659, himself with nine others should purchase the island of Nantucket. The purchase of which was concluded and the deed signed July 2d, 1659. Nantucket was originally under the jurisdiction of the state of New York, and the early deeds and records in relation to the island are deposited in the archives at Albany, N. Y. In 1856, Franklin B. Hough compiled from official records in the office of the Secretary of State at Albany, New York, many very valuable and interesting papers relative to Nantucket, which the Hon. John V. L. Pruyn had published in an edition of one hundred and fifty copies for private distribution, feeling that they were of too much interest to many of the descendants of Nantucket to be kept in oblivion. To that work (a copy of which the author has in his library) are we indebted for the following correct copies of deeds and some of the letters relating to the management of the island as late as 1687. We owe Dr. Hough a debt of gratitude for his labors.

The following deeds are all that relate to the island of Nantucket:

At Saliſbury,

February: –59.

At a Meeting of the ſaid Purchaſers, or the major Part of them, approved of and allowed by the reſt, together w^th^ ſome others that were owned for Aſſociated, as will hereafter appeare; it was agreed, and determined, and appointed as followeth, viz^t^ That theſe ten Owners will admit of ten more Partners, who ſhall have equal Proportion, Power, and Intereſt with themſelves And that either of the Purchaſers aforementioned ſhall have Liberty to take a Partner whom he pleaſe, not being juſtly excepted againſt by the reſt. At the Meeting was owned Partner with Chriſtopher Huſſye, Robert Pyke; Robert Barnard was owned a Partner with Thomas Barnard; Edward Starbuck was owned to bee Thomas Macy's Partner; and Triſtram Coffin Jun^r^. Partner with Stephen Greenleafe; and James Coffin Partner with Peter Coffin.

At the ſame Meeting, It was Ordered and Determined, that there ſhould bee ten other Inhabitants admitted into the Plantation, who ſhall have ſuch Accommodations as the Owners or Purchaſers ſhall judge meet, as namely, neceſſary Tradeſmen and Seamen.

In the summer of 1659, Thomas Macy gave shelter to four of the persecuted sect. Complaint was made against him and he was summoned to appear before the general court and answer the charges preferred. Instead of complying with the requisition he sent a letter of which the following is a copy:

"This is to entreat the honored court not to be offended because of my non-appearance. It is not from any slighting the authority of the honored court, nor from feare to answer the case; but I have bin for some weeks past very ill, and am so at present; and notwithstanding my illness, yet I, desirous to appear, have done my utmost endeavour to hire a horse, but cannot procure one at present. I, being at present destitute have endeavored to purchase, but at present cannot attaine it, but I shall relate the truth of the case, as my answer would be to ye honored court, and more cannot be proved, nor so much. On a rainy morning, there came to my house, Edward Wharton and three men more; the said Wharton spoke to me, saying that they were traveling eastward and desired me to direct them in the way to Hampton and asked me how far it was to Casco Bay. I never saw any of ye men afore except Wharton, neither did I require their names or what they were; but by their carriage I thought they might be Quakers and told them so: and therefore desired them to passe on their way, saying to them I might possibly give offence in entertaining them, and as soone as the violence of the rain ceased (for it rained very hard), they went away and I never saw them since. The time that they stayed in the house was about three quarters of an hour; but I can safely affirme it was not an houre. They spake not many words in the time, neither was I at leisure to talk with them; for I came home wet to ye skin; immediately afore they came to the house and I found my wife sick in bed. If this satisfie not the honored court I shall subject to their sentence. I have not willingly offended. I am ready to serve and obey you in the Lord. 27$^{d}$ of y$^{e}$ 8$^{m}$ 59 (1659).

"Tho: Macy"

Two of the men who accompanied Edward Wharton, were William Robinson a merchant of London, and Marmaduke Stephenson of Yorkshire, England, both of whom were hanged in Boston the 27th of October, 1659, for being Quakers.

Notwithstanding Thomas Macy's letter of explanation he was fined thirty shillings, and ordered to be admonished by the governor. He paid the fine, accepted the admonition from the governor, but resolved that that should be the last. Tradition has passed down to the present generation a very thrilling story of his abandoning his lands and property and fleeing with his wife and children in an open boat. Records and the character of the man lead us to a different conclusion. He with nine others purchased the island of Nantucket, as early as February, 1659, though the deed does not appear to have been signed until July the same year. He did not commit the heinous crime of sheltering beneath his roof from the inclemency of the weather four persecuted Quakers until July or August of that year, therefore, the sentence of the court could not have been the first cause of his going to Nantucket, further why should he flee from the payment of thirty shillings and leave his property behind him, consisting of lands, cattle and household furniture, worth many times that amount. What other cause could he have had for leaving suddenly; he was no coward, he had braved the dangers of the ocean and come to a country almost uninhabited except by Indians; he had publicly declared his religious convictions in direct opposition to the Puritan clergy, and to the mandates of the court. Such a man certainly knew no fear. No, he left because he could not in justice to the dictates of his own conscience longer submit to the tyranny of the clergy and those in authority. Having in conjunction with others purchased the island he thought this a good opportunity to carry out his long contemplated plans. So, in September or October he embarked in a small sail boat with his wife and children and such household furniture as he could conveniently carry, and in company with Isaac Coleman and Edward Starbuck set sail for Nantucket. They crossed Boston Bay, rounded Cape Cod and thence sailed direct for the island. When crossing the sound from Cape Cod to the island quite a storm arose and his wife being rather superstitious advised him to return to the main land, fearing they could not live through such a sea in such a frail vessel. He assured her that he had perfect faith, and desired her not to despair. When shortly after she entreated him again to turn back he replied to her "Woman, go below and seek thy God. I fear not the witches on earth or the devils in hell." They reached the island without accident. Thus Thomas Macy was driven from Massachusetts by the same persecuting spirit that drove the pilgrims from the shores of England. With unknown fear, with undaunted courage, and with an unfaltering trust in the guiding and guarding hand of Heaven, did he brave all dangers to secure a free altar and a safe home, and thereby transmit to his descendants the seeds of true liberty and pure religion.

They found upon the island about 3,000 Indians who received them kindly, and assisted them in preparing for winter quarters. Thomas Macy and family were the first white settlers of the island of Nantucket. In the winter of 1659, they were joined by one Dagget who came to the island from Martha's Vineyard for the purpose of hunting. What a picture have we now before us: this devout man with his wife and five little children, the oldest thirteen years and the youngest four years of age, with Isaac Coleman and Edward Starbuck, the former a mere lad of twelve years, living upon this island through the severity of a winter, surrounded by native Indians of whose character and language they were entirely ignorant. The natives seeing their mission was peace rendered them every assistance they could, and supplied them with fish and game, which were abundant about and on the island. In the spring of 1660, Edward Starbuck returned to Salisbury and fully reported their comfortable situation. During that year some eight or ten families removed from Salisbury to the Island, and from that time the number of civilized inhabitants continued to increase. Thomas Macy was the first recorder appointed for Nantucket and the first book of records now in the recorder's office on the island was probably written by himself or rather part of it. We again have recourse to the work of Mr. Hough for many little incidents in the management and local affairs of the inhabitants :

July 15, 1661 At a Meeting on Nantuckett of the Owners or Purchaſers inhabiting here, Mr Mayhew being preſent; and M^r^ Ffolger: It was Agreed and concluded, that each Man of the Owners or Purchaſers ſhall have Liberty to chooſe his Houſe Lott on any Place within our Limits, not formerly taken up, and that each Houſe Lott ſhall conteyne ſixty Rodd ſquare to a whole Accommodation, or Share, or the value of it.

July 20^th^, 1662.

And as to Criminal Caſes, That they have Power both at their Private Co^rts^ at Home, as well as at y^e^ Gen^rll^ Co^rt^, to inflict Puniſhm^t^ on Offend^rs^ ſoe farre as Whipping, Stocks, and Pilloring, or other Publick Shame. But if y^e^ Crime happen to bee of a higher nature, where Life, Limbe, or Baniſhment are concerned, That ſuch Matt^rs^ be Tranſmitted to y^e^ Gen^rll^ Co^rt^ of Aſſizes likewiſe.

Petition of Peter Foulger about Proceedings at the General Court of Martin's Vineyard, 1676.

[New York Colonial MSS., xxiv, Secretary's Office.]

To the Right Hon: Major Andros, Gouernour at New Yorke,

The humble Petition of Peter Ffoulgėr, now Priſoner at Shearburn upon the Iſland of Nantuckett, vpon the real Acount of his Royal Highneſs Intereſt, (at leaſt in his Judgment,) is as followeth:

May it pleaſe your Honor to vnderſtand, that the Occaſion of this my Petition is to acquaint your Honour with that new Trouble that my ſelfe an others meete now withal in this Place, ffor indeed I cannot wel informe your Hon^r^ how it is in my own Caſe, vnles I ſpeak ſomething of the generall Caſe. So it was that when the Date of Mr. Tho: Macy's Comiſſion was out, he called the Town together, and being met he told them that his Comiſſion was out, yet he did aſſert it, and deſired to know of the Town who would ſtand by him in it. Som of vs ſaid it was not the Town's Buſineſs to ſpeake of his Comiſſion, but we did conceiue that your Hon: had left a ſafe and plain Way for the carrying on of Gouernment til further Order. Others ſayd that his Commiſſion was in Force til further Order, though not expreſt and argued it out from former Inſtructions, and begun to be very fierce. We thought their End to be bad, and therefore ſayd littel or nothing more, (they being the greater Part,) but were reſoulued to be quite, looking vpon it as an evil Time. After this there cam hither from Puſcattaway Mr. Peter Coffin and ſome others, to ſtay here this Winter for fear of the Indians. Then another Meeting was called to chuſe new Aſſiſtants to Mr. Macy. We knowing that we ſhould be out voted, ſat ſtil and voted not. The firſt Man that was choſen was Peter Coffin; Stephen Huſſey was the Man that carried on the Deſigne in ſuch a rude Manner as this:—Com Sirs, lets chuſe Peter Coffin, he will be here but a Month or two, and then we ſhall have tenn Pound Fine of him. A Man that is in Commiſſion in Bay and is gone thither agayn. A Man that brought hither an evil Report of your Hon: from the Bay, which ſome of vs did publiquely proteſt againſt, and how he hath carried it ſince choſen I ſhall leave at preſent. But if your Hon: did know the Man as well as God know him, or but halfe ſo well as ſome of vs know him, I do verily belieue that your Hon: would diſlike his Ruling here as much as any of vs. In the like vnciuil Manner, they choſe two young Men more, Stephen Huſſey calling upon them to corne[1] ſuch a Man, and ſuch a Man, becauſe he had Cattle at theire Houſes to Winter, and if they did not chuſe them he was afraid they would not winter them wel. The ſayd Stephen bringing his Corn which betoken Choice open in his Hand, and called vpon others to Corn this Man and that Man; Such a Meeting as I never was at for ſuch a Work. And being Clarke and thereby to ſe to the Votes, I cald vpon them to be Ciuil, and not to make a Maygame of chuſeing Men for ſuch Imployment, and ſom others ſpake after the ſame Maner, but as they began ſo they ended.

Now that your Hon: may vnderſtand how they cam to be the greater p^t^, it was by Mr. Macy his forceing about and his Family, a Man who was as much for the Dukes Intereſt when we were with your Hon: at New Yorke as any of vs, but now for diuers by Ends it is otherwiſe. I am ſorry to trouble your Hon^r^: to Read ſo much of this durty Stuff, but that my own Buſines depends ſo much vpon it as that I fear your Hon: wil not vnderſtand it, without ſom Intimation of it. December 26, was our Quarter Court, and I being Clarke was at a Strait what to do, becauſe I did queſtion as Things were, whether they would keepe a Legal Court or no, though I ſayd nothing but was Reſolued to be quiet, and to that End went to the Court and carried the Court Booke with me, thinking thereby to while away Time with as much Peace as could be til either your Hon: cam to vs or ſom further order; but being there preſently ſaw that I was in . . . . . for if I did not Write what they would, Peter Coffin told me they would preſently chuſe a new Clarke. I ſaw then that the Booke was that which they aymed at, I did as wel as I could at that Time, and did think that I would conſider better of my next . . . . . ſince that they haue kept many private Courts that they gaue me no Notice of: Ffeb. 10^th^, cam the Conſtable to . . . . . the . . . . ke and al other Records of that Nature as your Hon^r^ may ſee by this incloſed Paper[2] which is Mr. Macy's own

[1] Alluding to the ancient custom of balloting with corn and beans; the former for, the latter against the candidate.

[2] Tis the Order of the Court that the Conſtable be ſent to Peter Ffoulger for the Court Booke, and all the Records of that Nature, and this is to impower the Conſtable herein, and to bring them to y^e^ Court forthwith, and Peter Ffoulger is hereby required to deliver them Pr me

Tho: Macy

Mag:

Hand, Reading the Paper and conſidering that they did not want me but the Booke, I returned them this Anſwer in Writing, that the Booke was put into my Hands by the Generall Court, and til the ſame Power, or a higher, did cal for it from me I ſhould Indeauour to keepe it, but if they would haue any Coppye out of it they might at any Time haue them. Immediately the Conſtable cam with a Summons, and hauing no Time to conſider further of it I gave him no Anſwer, but went to Cap$^{t}$ Gardners Houſe where preſently he cam with a Speciall Warrant. I would haue ſent your Hon: the Coppy of them but I cannot git them though often deſyred them of the Conſt; The ſayd Conſtable by the Help of other men, haled and draged me out of the Cap$^{t}$. Houſe and caried me to the Place where they were met. I ſpake not a Word to the Conſtable, nor reſiſted him in the leaſt. When I cam at the Houſe I ſaw none of the Court, but the Conſtable told me that the Court was adjourned til Wedneſday next and that I was committed into his Hands and muſt giue Bond to appeare then.

Feb. 19$^{th}$, I cam before them and carried myſelfe every way as ciuilly as I could, only I ſpake never a Word, for I was fully perſuaded that if I ſpake any thing at al, they would turn it againſt me. I remembered alſo the old Saying that of nothing comes nothing.

But it ſeemes my Silence did helpe to bring forth this Sentence, of which you$^{r}$ Hon: hath here a Coppy.[1]

After my Sentence, the Conſtable called for twenty Pound Bond, or to Priſon I muſt go preſently, when they al know that I am a poore old Man, and not able to maintayne my Family. All my Eſtate, if my Debts were payd, will not amount to halfe ſo much, and as for making vſe of Friends, they al know that I haue more Need of any Helpe that way for the Supply of my Family. For want of Bond away the Conſtable carried me to Priſon, a Place where never any Engliſh-man was put, and where the Neighbors Hoge had layd but the Night before, and in a bitter cold Froſt and deepe Snow. They had onely thrown out moſt of the Durt,

[1] At a Court of Ajurment held in the Towne of Sherburne, 14$^{th}$ Feburary, 1676 Petter Foulger, Inditted for Contempt of his Magis Athority, in not appearing before the Court according to ſumons ſerued on him and being Aprehended by Specall Warrant being braoft to the Court to Anſwer for his Contentious Carage, And being demanded why he did ſo act gaue no Anſwer: Th'o the Court waited on hem a While and vrged him to ſpeak, The Sentence of the Court is to Remite the Cauſe to the Court of Aſize at New York as the law derects and to giue twenty Pound Bond for his appearance, and to abide the Order of the Court and to ſtand committed ti'l Bond be given.

Hoge Dung and Snow. The Reſt the Conſtable told me I might ly vpon if I would, that is vpon the Boards in that Caſe, and without Victuals or Fire. Indeed I perſwaded him to fetch a little Hay, and he did ſo, and ſome Friend did preſently bring in Beding and Victuals.

But as for Mr. Macy and the Reſt of our new young Magiſtrates, your Hon: may ſee how far theire Pitty did extend to a poore old Man, aged 60 Yeares. At the Preſent I haue ſome Leaue from my keeper to be ſometimes at my own Houſe, but how long that will hold I know not. I haue informed your Hon: truely what my Condition is, and my humble Petition is, that your Hon: wloud be pleaſed ſo to conſider of it, as to ſhew ſome Fauour towards your vnworthy Petitioner, and in your Wiſdom to finde out ſome Way for my Freedom, as alſo to ſtop the Rage and Fury of theſe Men, Leaſt others better then myſelfe be brought ſuddenly to the ſame Condition that I am in if not worſe, for the Mercy of ſom of theſe Men is Cruelty itſelfe, And in Truth I was not the Man that they moſt aymed at. Others ſhould haue bin in Priſon at the ſame Time, but that they found more heuier Work of it, then they thought of, for it began preſently to ſet a fire the whole Iſland, for I hauing liued 30 Yeares vpon this Iſland and the Vineyard, was ſo wel known, and ſo wel Beloued of Engliſh and Indians, (whether deſerued or not) that the Indians inquired what the Cauſe was of my Impriſonment, And though both Ptys was unwilling to tel them, yet being before ſo vnſatisfied with the Orders or Laws that theſe new Magiſtrates had made for them. They p'ſently found ſo much that they began to ſpeak high in the Caſe for theſe and the like Reaſons as I ſuppoſe our new Court though they ſpeak great Words, yet at Preſent they are not ſo full of Action, and I do moſt humbly intreat your Hon: to conſider of the Condition of the poore Indians in this Reſpect, for they haue ſuch Cauſe to ſpeak againſt their Actings, that we haue no way to quite them, but to perſuade them to be ſtil til your Hon: come or ſome Order from you, which we tel them we do belieue wil certaynely be. I haue bin Interpreter here from the Beginning of the Plantation, when no Engliſhman but myſelfe could ſpeake ſcarſe a Word of Indian, at which Time I am ſure ſome of theſe Men that deal thus with me now, had felt Arrows in their Sides from the Indians for reall Wrong that they did them, had not I ſtept in between them and made Peace. And I haue euer ſince bin able by the Helpe of ſome antient Men, to keep Peace vpon the Iſland, but now I am not able to anſwer them no other than as aforeſayed, for they ſay there is now young Men in Place they do not vnderſtand that Way. They cannot belieue that young Men, eſpecially ſuch Men, can vnderſtand Things like old Men, and they are always in Doubt whether they haue Juſtice or no. They ſay further, that there is a Boſton Man ſits in Place by Mr. Macy, and he Blind him ſo that he canot ſe the Right Path, and they ſay that they do not vnderſtand what he hath to do to Judge their Caſes. Theſe and ſuch like Words I and others haue from them, and I doe verily belieue they are theire own Words, that no Engliſh body euer put any ſuch Things into their Minds.

We haue had Peace hitherto when our Neighbours but Juſt ouer the Water, haue loſt ſo many of ther dear Relations in bloody Wars, I hope your Hon: wil in your Wiſdome finde out ſom Way for vs that we may be able to Anſwer theſe Queris of the Indians, that Peace may continue ſtil between vs as heretofore. I moſt humbly intreat your Hon to pardon my Bouldneſs in Writing ſo much vpon this Subject, for I haue ſo much to doe with the Indians for ſo many Years that I cannot forbear Writing, Though I cannot Write but with Tears, conſidering the Miſery that they and we are like to come to. If you^r^ Hon: put not a Stop to theſe violent Motions, I verily belieue it were better for vs and the Indians alſo, that we had no Liberty at al (at leaſt til we could vſe it better,) then thus to abuſe it.

I hear now that our new Court intend to deſyer leaue of you^r^ Hon: that my Cauſe may be tried at the Generall Court. But I humbly intreat you Hon: to preuent it. I ſhall ſit down fully ſatisfied by your Honours Sentence, or by the Sentence of the Dukes reall Friend whom your Hon: ſhall appoint. It is known that I haue euer bin for the Duke's Intereſt if they had don ſo too, we had not bin ſo many Yeares without a Generall Court, and what kind of Court they are like to keepe, and what Juſtice I am like to haue from them (as Things go now) your Hon: I doubt not wil eaſily conceiue; and now, Right Honourable, if I and my Friends might injoy ſo much Happineſs as to ſo but a Line or two of your Honour's Pleaſure, it would aſſuredly bring much Joy to your unworthy Petitioner; Yea, it would certainly reuiue our Spirits in this Time of Trouble, til ſom of vs might haue that happy Opertunity to appear before your Hon: againe. And thus humbly beſeeching your Hon: that in your Wiſdom you would be pleaſed ſo to conſider of my Age and Inability, as to pas by my rude Manner of Writing. I humbly leaue this my Pe^ti^tion with your Hon: and reſt.

You^r^ humble Petitioner, and unworthy Servant, who always account it his Duty to pray for you^r^ Honour's Welfare here, and eternal Happineſs hereafter.

Dated March 27^th^ 167⅘.

Father Houlgate

Right Honourable:

We whoſe Names are here ſubſcribed, do verily believe that we are Peter Ffoulgers Caſe examined and judged, by your Hon: or any other of his Royall Highneſs Officers whome your Hon: ſhal apoynt, (except at the Vineyard) his Offence wil be found nought elſe, but ſtanding for his Royal Highnes Intereſt and Gouernment.

Nantucket, May 9, 1676.

May it pleaſe yo$^{r}$ Hon$^{r}$, where yo$^{r}$ Goodneſſe have bin ſuch as to ſend ſo after us to know how tis with us in theſe troubleſome and dangerous Times, wherein o$^{r}$ Neighbours have ſo greatly ſuffered and we as yet through the Goodneſſe of God are free, theſe are to returne Thanks the ſame of yo$^{r}$ Vigilancy we doubt not, hath conduced to o$^{r}$ Peace theſe rude Lines are to give yo$^{r}$ Hon$^{r}$ an Accompt how Things are and haue bin with us: a conſiderable Company of Indians haue formerly owned themſelues Philip's Men, but ſince the Wars began they haue ſeemingly we hope declared themſelves againſt him. We haue carried o$^{r}$ſelues towards them manifeſting no Diſtruſt and Things haue bin orderly carried among them: onely we haue heard now and then a Word from ..... which we haue not liked but haue ouerlooked the ſame. And I doubt not but we may enjoy Peace (if o$^{r}$ Sins hinder not) ſo long as we can keep ſtrong Liquor from them. Yo$^{r}$ Hon$^{r}$ may vnderſtand that ſome that dwell elſewhere haue ſome Yeares paſt ſent Goods to trade with the Indians vpon the accompt of Fiſhing, and otherwiſe and great quantities of ſtrong Liquor haue bin ſent and notwithſtanding all orders and care about it to p'hibit it hath bin one way or other diſpoſed to the Indians which hath occaſioned great Abuſe and Diſorder, but ſince the Warrs began they haue not had much: the laſt

Fall the Court tooke into their Poſſeſſion all on the Iſland and diſpoſed of it by ſmall quantities as the Owners and the Engliſh Neighbours had need, and becauſe of the late Scarcity little hath lately come:

The agent here that carried on the Trade for the Gentlemen hath bargained with the Indians to giue each Man a dram before they go out to fiſhing in the Morning, but vnder that p'tence much Abuſe have bin, but reſpecting that p'ſent Voyage a ſmall Quantity came, about 16 Gallons which was carried to y^e^ Indians. It ſo came to paſſe that a Sloop came to my Hono^d^ Couſin Mr. Mayhew from the Hon^ble^ Councell, and Mr. Mayhew ſent to me the Order that prohibited ſtrong Drink being carried to any Indian Plantation, which Order came to my Hand the 6 day of the Week, and I preſently went to y^e^ Houſe of him that had carried the Liquor afore mentioned to y^e^ Indians, and carryed the Order with me but finding him not at Home left a Warrant at the Houſe requireing him in his Ma^ties^ to fetch away the Liquor carried to y^e^ Indians: but ſlighted and not at all obeyed, but the Liquor ſpent there as I vnderſtand, The Monday following I cauſed the Order to be.read in the Town Meeting, which ſome greatly diſliked, as I vnderſtood.

My humble Requeſt is, a Word or two from yo^r^ Hon: about it. Sir, concerning the Peace we hitherto enjoy, I cannot imagine it could haue bin if ſtrong Liquor had bin among the Indians, as formerly: for my owne y^t^ I haue bin to y^e^ vtmoſt an oppoſed of the Trade theſe 38 Yeares, and I verily belieue (reſpecting the Indians) tis the only Ground of the miſerable p'ſent Ruine to both Nations; for tis that hath kept them from Civility, they haue bin by the drunken Trade kept all the while like wild Beares and Wolves in the Wilderneſſe; concerning my vnderſtanding in the Matter I haue now ſent to Gouerno^r^ Leueret, y^e^ which I hope may come to publicke View &c. But reſpecting the p'ſent Times and State of Things, I humbly entreat if in yo^r^ Wiſdom you ſhall ſee meet to make a ſtrict Law or Order reſpecting o^r^ Iſland to p'hibit any Veſſel whatſoever that ſhall come in y^e^ Harbor to ſell or giue any ſtrong Drink more or leſs to any Indian vnder a penalty, and to Command or Order the Gouernor here to ſearch all Veſſels for ſtrong Drink and either to cauſe the Maſter or Merchant to carry away or take into cuſtody ſo much as they iudge may be needfull for the moderate uſe of the Engliſh here, or for Indians in caſe of diſtreſſe, &c. and according to ye diſcreſſion of the Court to put it in the Hands of ſome Man or Men that may be judged faithfull by ſmall quantities, diſpoſe as be needed, for tho y^e^ Traders it may be do not diſpoſe of much to y^e^ Indians, yet many of the Inhabitants do frequently purchaſe it p'tending for their own vſe and ſel it to y^e^ Indians. An Order from yo^r^ Hon^r^ will be of greater Force than any we can make tho left too Liberty herein: and whereas in yo^r^ Letter to Mr Mayhew you giue Liberty to diſpoſe of Powder to truſty Indians for their neceſſary vſe, we judge it were better for us wholly to p'hibit, for tho ſome here we apprehend may be confided in, yet ſo to diſtinguiſh will giue great Offence, yet by priuate Inſtructions yo$^{r}$ Hon$^{r}$ may referre ſomething to y$^{e}$ diſcreſſion of the Gouernor, reſpecting contingent Accidents in reference to .... and Peace, not further Trouble at p'ſent I Commend you ..... y$^{e}$ weighty Affaires committed to yo$^{r}$ management to y$^{e}$ ..... of the only wiſe God and remaine Yo$^{r}$ Seruant at Command,

Right Honorabell:

May it Pleaſe your Honor.

Duty and Love Commands; neſeſity conſtraynes: and your Honours Wiſdome and Care of us embouldens mee once more to petiſhtion and enforme your Honor of our preſent State: Firſt, that there hath bene an unhapy diferance Amongſt us; beyond before my coming to this Iland; and ſince not decreſed, is to Evident: the Grounds whereof I belieue your Honor was neuer yet Rightly Enformed of, and at my Laſt being before your Honor, could not then well do it by Reaſon of your Honors Expedition for Delaware; but I did then hope at your Honors Returne, to haue gone through al Things as it then was: but the unhapy Indian War unexpectedly breaking out: hath hitherto hindred, that Maters are now groune much worſe than before:

If I may, therefor, Humbly Entreat your Honors Patience a litell, I ſhall as Breafly as poſſabelly I can, giue your Honor the ſhorte of it, and leaue it more fully to be don when I ſhall find the Hapines againe to ſtand before your Honor: And now Right Honorabell, that there was ſum kind of Purchaſe of Mr. Mayhew by ſum Gentlemen liueing in the Maſachuſets, of Liberty to plant vpon this Iland; and after that, the Purchas of ſum Land of the Indian Right ſuch as it was; and a part of theas Purchaſers came to Inhabit, Taking in ſum other Inhabitance with them on Termes as agreed one: this is .... c Leave: But his Royall Highneſs haueing obtained his Royall Grant from his Royall Majeſty together with all other Titells being Reſigned over to him and Generall Nickels rightfully Taking Poſſeſſion for his Ryall Highnes, and Gouerning hear for a Time, as your Honor well know did ſend a verball Meſage to the Inhabitance, and all Perſons conſerned on this Ilands, to apear before him to make out there Claymes, and Reſeue ther Land by Athority of his Ryall Highneſs as the Law directs, which Meſage was ſo far ſlighted as to take no noties of it.

After this, the Right Honorabell Cor[ll] Loflas[1] coming Gouernor; did again ſend out his Warrant for Perſons here Concerned to apear before him within fouer Months to make out ther Claymes: and to Reſcue their Land by Athority from his Ryall Highnes or Elce all ther Claymes ſhould be ever after voyd to all Intents. The Copy of this was ſent to thoſe of the Purchaſers yet in the Maſetuſets: and the Inhabitance haear wayted on them about one Yeare after the Time giuen them before they mad ther Apearance Acording to Warrant: Reſeiving no Anſwer nether was ther euer aney Anſwer to this day or aney Apearance; for them to ſay our Maſatuſetts Maſters as will abondantly Apeare. Now heare comes in the Ground of all our diferance, that ſeuerall of the Inhabitance joyned with the Purchaſers, afirming that this ther ould Titell as Good, and that they need not to take the Titell from his Ryall Highneſs as the Law directs, and that it was ther one before. I gaue them this Anſwer after ſum others, that I did beleue that it would neuer apear that your vnſpoted Honor had euer aſiſted the Indians, or ben the Abeter of his Mageſties or the Engliſh Enemies. One Word more, I would humbly entreat Fauor in; due Reſpect of Peter Folger, who now Remayne a Priſoner, for no other Reaſon except the ould Caſe as Abues, but not Apering to ther ſo, ther being not aboue ½ an Hour from the Time of the Sumons till the Conſtable fechet him, I verely beleue, vpon which his Indictment and Sentence was, a Copy wherof Peter Folger will Preſent your Honor with; and now muſt Remayn a Priſoner except your Honors ſauer Grant a Releace, til he may ſtand before your Honor which is his deſier, wher I verely beleue his Ofence will be found not Elce in Reality, but ſtanding to mayntayne his Ryall Highneſs Propriety and Gouerment, to which he is willing to Abid your Honors Senſuer. Wee hear, our Maſters hear Intend, to haue him Remoued hence to the Generall Corte at the Vynnard, which we look at, as from the frying Pane to the Fier. Atteſt, ASA G. BUNKER, Regiſter.

Thomas Macy died on the island of Nantucket, the 19th day of April, 1682, aged 74 years. No tomb stone marks the final resting place of his earthly remains, but a monument has been reared in the hearts of his descendants in commemoration of him, which the ruthless hand of time neither obliterates nor crumbles. We love and respect his memory for his undaunted courage and bravery in facing all dangers rather than yield to the will of man his religious convictions. We treasure his memory as being one of the early settlers and founders of this great republic, and by his uprightness and sterling worth and integrity, added his mite in inculcating into the minds of those about him the principles of self-government the foundation rock of American independence.

He appears to have died without a will, as letters of administration were issued to his son John Macy, as we find from the records of deeds of the island, book No. 2, page 33, the action of the court, as well as the copy of inventory then filed.

His widow Sarah Macy (Sarah Hopcott) died in 1706 at the advanced age of ninety-four years. She came with him from Chilmark, England.

The following ballad was written by the poet, J. G. Whittier, not many years since, and may be found interesting to some of my readers who can contrast the beautiful embellishments of the poet with historical facts:

The Exiles"

The goodman sat beside his door
One sultry afternoon,
With his young wife singing at his side
A quaint and goodly tune.

A glimmer of heat was in the air,
The dark green woods were still;
And the skirts of a heavy thunder cloud
Hung over the western hill.

Black, thick and vast arose that cloud
Above the wilderness,
As some dark world from upper air
Were stooping over this.

At times the solemn thunder pealed,
And all was still again,
Save a low murmur in the air
Of coming wind and rain.

Just as the first big rain drop fell,
A weary stranger came,
And stood before the farmer's door,
With travel soiled, and lame.

Sad seemed he, yet sustaining hope
Was in his quiet glance,
And peace, like autumn's moonlight clothed
His tranquil countenance.

A look, like this his master wore
In Pilate's council hall:
It told of wrongs, but of a love
Meekly forgiving all.

"Friend! wilt thou give me shelter here?"
The stranger meekly said;
And leaning on his oaken staff,
The goodman's features read.

"My life is hunted — evil men
Are following in my track;
The traces of the torture's whip
Are on my aged back.

And much I fear 'twill peril thee
Within thy doors to take
A hunted seeker of the truth,
Oppressed for conscience sake."

"O," kindly spoke the goodman's wife,
"Come in, old man!" quoth she,
"We will not leave thee to the storm, Whoever thou mayst be."

Then came the aged wanderer in,
And silent sat him down;
While all within grew dark as night
Beneath the storm cloud's frown.

But while the sudden lightning's blaze
Filled every cottage nook,
And with the jarring thunder roll
The loosened casements shook.

A heavy tramp of horses' feet
Came sounding up the lane,
And half a score of horse or more
Came plunging through the rain.

"Now, goodman Macy, ope thy door,
We would not be housebreakers;
A rueful deed thou'st done this day,
In harboring banished quakers."

Out looked the cautious goodman then,
With much of fear and awe,
For there with broad wig drenched with rain,
The parish priest he saw.

"Open thy door, thou wicked man,
And let thy pastor in,
And give God thanks, if forty stripes
Repay thy deadly sin."

"What seek ye?" quoth the kind goodman,
"The stranger is my guest;
He is worn with toil and grievous wrong—
Pray let the old man rest."

"Now, out upon thee, canting knave!"
And strong hands shook the door,
"Believe me, Macy," quoth the priest,
"Thou'lt rue thy conduct sore."

Then kindled Macy's eye of fire,
"No priest, who walks the earth,
Shall pluck away the stranger guest
Made welcome to my hearth."

Down from his cottage wall he caught,
The match-lock hotly tried
At Preston-pans and Marston-moor
By fiery Ireton's side;

Where puritan and cavalier,
With shout and psalm contended;
And Rupert's oath, and Cromwell's prayer
With battle thunder blended.

Up rose the ancient stranger then;
"My spirit is not free
To bring the wrath and violence
Of evil men on thee;

And for thyself I pray forbear
Bethink thee of thy Lord,
Who healed again the smitten ear,
And sheathed his follower's sword.

I go, as to the slaughter led;
Friends of the poor, farewell,"
Beneath his hand the oaken door,
Back on its hinges fell.

"Come forth, old grey beard, yea and nay,"
The reckless scoffers cried,
As to a horseman's saddle bow
The old man's arms were tied.

And of his bondage hard and long
In Boston's crowded jail,
Where suffering woman's prayer was heard
With sickening childhood's wail.

It suits not with our tale to tell,
Those scenes have passed away—
Let the dim shadows of the past
Brood o'er that evil day.

"Ho, sheriff!" quoth the ardent priest,
"Take goodman Macy too;
The sin of this day's heresy
His back or purse shall rue."

And priest and sheriff both together
Upon his threshold stood,
When Macy, through another door
Sprang out into the wood.

"Now, good wife, as thou lovest me, haste,"
She caught his manly arm:
Behind, the parson urged pursuit,
With outcry and alarm.

Ho! speed the Macys, neck or nought,
The river's course was near:
The plashing on its pebbled shore
Was music to their ear.

A gray rock, tasseled o'er with birch,
Above the waters hung,
And at its base with every wave
A small light wherry swung.

A leap — they gain the boat — and there
The goodman wields his oar;
"Ill luck betide them all," he cried —
"The laggards upon shore."

Down through the crashing underwood
The burly sheriff came:
"Stand, goodman Macy — yield thyself;
Yield, in the king's own name."

"Now out upon thy hangman's face!"
Bold Macy answered then,
"Whip women on the village green,
But meddle not with men."

The priest came panting to the shore,
His grave cocked hat was gone;
Behind him, like some owl's nest, hung
His wig upon a thorn.

"Come back — come back," the parson cried,
"The church's curse beware."
"Curse an' thou wilt," said Macy, "but Thy blessing prithee spare."

"Vile scoffer," cried the baffled priest,
"Thou'lt yet the gallows see."
"Who's born to be hanged, will not be drowned," Quoth Macy merrily;

"And so, sir sheriff and priest, good bye!"
He bent him to his oar,
And the small boat glided quietly
From the twain upon the shore.

Now in the west, the heavy clouds
Scattered and fell asunder,
And feebler came the rush of rain,
While fainter growled the thunder.

And through the broken clouds the sun
Looked out serene and warm,
Painting its holy symbol-light
Upon the passing storm.

Oh, beautiful! that rainbow span,
O'er dim Crane neck was bended;
One bright foot touched the eastern hills
And one with ocean blended.

By green Pentucket's southern slope
The small boat glided fast,
The watchers at the block house saw
The strangers as they passed.

That night a stalwart garrison
Sat shaking in their shoes,
To hear the dip of Indian oars —
The glide of birch canoes.

They passed the bluff of Amesbury,
And saw the sunshine glow
Upon the powwow's winding stream,
And on the hills of Po.

The fisher-wives of Salisbury
(The men were all away)
Looked out to see the stranger oar
Upon their waters play.

Deer island's rocks and fir trees threw
Their sunset shadows o'er them,
And Newbury's spire and weathercock,
Peered o'er the pines before them.

Around the black rocks on their left
The marsh lay broad and green,
And on their right with dwarf shrubs crowned,
Plum island's hills were seen.

With skillful hand and wary eye,
The harbor bar was crossed;
A plaything of the restless wave,
The boat on ocean tossed.

The glory of the sunset heaven
On land and water lay,
On the steep hills of Agawam,
On cape, and bluff and bay.

They passed the gray rocks of Cape Ann
And Gloucester harbor bar;
The watch-fire of the garrison
Shone like a setting star.

How brightly broke the morning,
On Massachusetts bay!
Blue wave and bright green island,
Rejoicing in the day.

On passed the bark in safety,
Round isle and headland steep;
No tempest broke above them,
No fog-cloud veiled the deep.

Far round the bleak and stormy cape,
The venturous Macy passed,
And on Nantucket's naked isle
Drew up his boat at last.

And how in log-built cabin,
They braved the rough sea-weather;
And there, in peace and quietness,
Went down life's vale together;

How others drew around them,
And how their fishing sped,
Until to every wind of heaven,
Nantucket's sails were spread;

How pale want alternated
With plenty's golden smile;
Behold, is it not written
In the annals of the isle?

And yet that isle remaineth
A refuge of the free,
As when true hearted Macy
Beheld it from the sea.

Free as the winds that winnow
Her shrubless hills of sand;
Free as the waves that batter
Along her yielding land.

Than hers, at duty's summons,
No loftier spirit stirs:
Nor falls on human sufferings
A readier tear than hers.

God bless the sea-beat island!
And grant for evermore,
That charity and freedom dwell,
As now, upon her shore!

For the information of those members of the family who have never visited the island of Nantucket, a very brief sketch of it may be found interesting. It has already been shown how the island was under the jurisdiction of New York, where it remained until the third year of the reign of William and Mary (1691) when it was transferred to the colony of Massachusetts bay. It was first discovered by Captain Bartholomew Gosnold, an Englishman, whilst on a voyage from England to Virginia in 1602. The island is shaped somewhat like a horse-shoe or half-moon, is about fifteen miles long east and west, with an average breadth of about four miles, containing 29,380 acres or about fifty square miles.

It is for the most part level and sandy, though some parts, inclined to a little elevation, are capable of a high state of cultivation, producing Indian corn, rye, oats, barley, etc. Medicinal herbs and roots were abundant on the island, and were used by the natives, and by the English after settling there. Trees do not flourish, seldom attaining any height, owing to the prevalence of high winds and the length and severity of the winters. The town was called Sherborne according to written orders of Gov. Lovelace of New York, dated "Aprill y^e^ 18^th^ 1673," and recorded at Albany, N. Y., in the secretary's office, in Book of Deeds 111, page 85. But being the only town upon the island the distinctive appellation was lost in the general name of Nantucket, which name it retained until confirmed in 1795. As early as 1672, the inhabitants commenced whale fishing and pursued it until they obtained the lead as the principal mart in the world for the products of the whale fisheries, which position they retained until within the present century. In 1715, they had six sloops employed in fishing in the neighborhood of the island, whilst in 1775 they had one-hundred and fifty vessels from ninety to one-hundred and fifty tons, hunting the whale through the Atlantic ocean as far north as the island of Disco off Greenland, and as far south as off the coast of Brazil. Whilst many were employed in whale fishing, others were engaged in transporting the products of the whale to other markets and exchanging them for provisions and such articles as were required for fitting out whale ships, as well as for those who remained at home on the island. In winter, when many of the ships were laid up, the officers and men would be occupied at some trade, as it was considered just as essential that a boy should be taught a trade as that he should be taught spelling and arithmetic, and they became adepts in handling all kinds of mechanical implements. The whale ships were generally owned in shares, a blacksmith, a cooper, a block and pump maker, a painter, etc., etc., each taking a share, and each doing his share of the work to keep the ship in repair. When on a voyage the men did not receive wages, but each one took a share in the ultimate result of the voyage, a method which naturally caused each one to strive to his utmost for success, and it as well inculcated habits of industry, economy and fidelity. Such confidence and security did this course of life engender, that locks on front doors were almost unknown, and when any did have them, the keys were as often on the outside as in. It being understood if the key was on the outside the family were not at home. The women in the meantime doing their full share toward the general prosperity of the islanders. They were industrious, economical, neat and frugal housekeepers.

They attended entirely to the education and training of the young, had full charge of all household affairs, and acted as nurse and physician to the sick. The style of living was primitive in the extreme; they lived as a band of brothers and sisters; industry and frugality were virtues, and idleness was a vice. For their cordial hospitality to strangers they were always noted. Upon the arrival of a stranger or visitor from the mainland every larder was opened, every horse and calash (a two wheeled cart without springs in which the riders either stood up or sat in chairs, holding on to ropes fastened to the sides) tendered, and every civility shown, without any ostentation, but with a free and willing heart.

The streets of the town, or more properly speaking roads, for they were not paved, are exceedingly crooked and narrow, and branch out from each other in all directions, every man being at liberty to place his house according to his own fancy, but generally placing the front to correspond with some particular point of the compass rather than to conform to any direction of the street. The streets were not named until the imposition of the direct tax, under President Adams, being known by the name of some one of the principal residents, such as William Coffin street, Matthew Starbuck street, etc., etc., but now they are known as Pearl, Federal, Washington streets, etc., The houses were built of wood, two stories high, but very low ceilings, with a look out on top to observe what ships had arrived, and many with vanes, to tell whether the wind was fair for the packet. Every child could tell "which way the wind blows" and every old woman could talk "sea talk" as familiarly as the captain of a whale ship. If her child did not behave she would "bring her to;" or she would "cruise about" to call on some of her "messmates," or she would order the horse "tackled up," see that you were properly

"rigged out," and tell you to get "under way," "make a harbor" at Siasconsit, then "track about," and come home. A scant meal would be a "short allowance," and she would know a "landlubber" by the "cut of his gib." Such was Nantucket in its palmy days when their habiliments were homespun, when they were respected for their very singularities, when their verbal promises to pay were more honestly and punctually met than many written ones of the present day. The islanders always set apart one day in the year as a grand holiday peculiar to themselves. About the middle of June, all the sheep on the island were driven into pens and sheared of their wool. This was a grand jubilee: booths were erected on the commons, schools vacated, business suspended and every one turned out to assist at the sheep shearing and the general jollification. These sheep were generally pastured on the commons which contained about 10,000 acres. Every person owning a "cows' common" was entitled to pasture eight sheep, a horse being considered equal to two cows. If any difficulty arose between any of the inhabitants, the disputants would arrange to meet in the evening at the house of one or the other, invite a few friends, state their grievances, and have their differences settled amicably by their friends.

The revolution of 1776 almost completely broke up their business in whale fishing, and many taking, as they supposed, advantage of the portending clouds, removed from the island as early as 1771, and from that date to 1783 many families left, settling in many parts of the Union, Maine, New Bedford, Mass., on the banks of the Hudson river, N. Y., and at New Garden, N. C., whilst William Rotch took many with him to Dunkirk, France, to pursue the whaling business under the auspices of the French government. In a congressional report to congress by Thomas Jefferson, he reported the state of the whale fishery of Massachusetts, in 1775, estimated about as follows: 304 vessels employed, tonnage 27,840 tons, seamen employed 4,059, returning about 47,040 barrels of oil; in which report, Nantucket stood accredited with 150 vessels, 15,075 tons, 2,025 seamen, and 30,000 barrels of oil. After the close of the war, the whaling business was revived; but New Bedford had made such strenuous efforts to secure this branch of business that it ultimately resulted in the inhabitants of the island abandoning it and turning their attention to other pursuits. It has been a great nursery for seamen, and many of our present best sea captains received their first nautical knowledge from Nantucket. The wharves to which were once moored many a staunch whaling vessel, and upon which the sailors were discharging their hard earned cargo, the air resounding with the busy hum of mechanics, and the coopers keeping time with their hammers and drivers, all life, all animation, are now a dilapidated wreck. The planks have decayed, and been washed away gradually by each receding wave; the piles yet stand covered with green ocean moss as mementoes of the past. Many of the houses have been sold, taken down, removed to places on the mainland and reerected. The oil and candle factories are closed, coopers' shops are deserted, the last shavings, made perhaps a quarter of a century ago, a few of which yet remain to show the character of the building; the powerful stroke of the blacksmith's sledge is no longer heard. Nantucket has been asleep. The time honored and weather beaten signs over some of the doors look down with apparent sadness upon the change. Fortunately, some few are yet enterprising, and are striving to rescue others from their Rip Van Winkle lethargy. They have recently started a new steam boat called the Island Home, which plies tri-weekly between the island and Hyannis, a small provincial village, situated on Cape Cod about eighty miles from Boston: and connected with it by rail road. The present inhabitants very justly feel proud of their schools. One was founded in the year 1826, by a fund of £2,500 sterling, given for the purpose of purchasing and maintaining it by Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin of the British navy, who had many relatives and connections on the island. Since that date great attention has been paid to education. They have also a high school, which is considered second to none in the state of Massachusetts. The History of Nantucket by Obed Macy, published in 1835, gives a very full account of the island, and will be found entertaining; some of the foregoing facts having been obtained from it, as well as from personal observation.

There is an effort being made to make Nantucket a place of summer resort, and a more pleasant or healthy place could hardly be found. The weather during the summer months is delightful, the days are only moderately warm, the nights are cool, so much so that blankets are always comfortable. The sail from Hyannis to the island, occupying about two hours, gives one at times a fair idea of the ocean, and enables them to pay their tribute to Neptune. The houses are lit with gas; there is an excellent hotel; fine fishing either in the lakes, of which there are two, or in the ocean; and, above all, the inhabitants retain their ancient feelings of hospitality. Every member of the Macy family will be fully repaid by making a pilgrimage to the island home of his forefathers.

JOHN WORTH.

Amongst the many old papers and documents sent for inspection was a will of John Macy, dated "This Thirtyeth Day of y^e^ 11mo 1744–5," in which he divided all his real estate amongst his sons, and to his daughters he bequeathed money only; but after reflection he appears to have made a new will and bequeathed his property as the above. Seth Macy (18) having made a will, which appeared to have given some dissatisfaction to his brothers, we therefore think best to furnish a copy of his last will as well as some letters relating to the same.

Signed Sealed Published Pronounced and Declared by the said Seth Macy to be his Last will and Testament In the presents of us.

To John Macy In North Carilina Gelford County at new Gardin

The above is a coppey of a will I wrote of my own head and carried it to thy brother Seth and I told him I had com to bring him a present and I would read it to him, and all the reply he made was, it is not worth a haveing then I told him he should have the will for the deed, and he went oute and then I told Judith to Lay it up and keep it safe, not then thinking what servis it might be, but since his desease finding he made such an unkind Inconsidarate unresonabel will, I have been glad that it hath been kept, so that his relations might se & know by it those that lived in distant parts of the contray that som of there friends and relations had not forgot them as I am knowing that divers hath ofered there seves to help him to make a Just will, so I shall refer to thy son in law Barzilia Gardiner for the more perticerlers on them maters and all other maters and conserns amonghst us whom I think will be abel to give the more perticerlar in all respects than I can rite, he hath ben often at my house and his company very agreabel to me for I can say I always felt glad to se him com in, further I do not think strang if thou should think that thou hath ben unkindly delt by with respect to thy brother Seths Last will, but he is gon now and no help to be had for it, and those that did help him in makeing his will must Look oute, I allway thought my Self more happey to be Ingered than to Inger any bodey, So I must brack short of and leave the to consider and make the best thou can of it so now as I am in the Seventy eighth yeare of my age thou may make the best of my riteing and Exkues all errors and shortness in it So now have to hop for thy welfare and subscribe my Self thy well wishing friend and kindsman.

P. S. I should be glad thou would give my Love to all my friends and relations but in perticerler to those that are or aught to have ben heirs to a part of the above said will and let them see for them Selvs what hath ben don for them

NANTUCKET 5^m^ 30^th^ 1791

Respected Friend JOHN MACY

Having understood that there had been some dissatisfaction with thee, relative to thy brother Seth Macy's disposition of his Estate, to the exclusion of thyself and brother's from a part therein, and since the coming of thy son in law Baizillai Gardner here, much conversation has been engrossed upon this subject, occasioning some concern and exercise to Friends minds, which induces us to write to thee at this time, not at the request of Wm. Macy, but from a feeling of duty, our minds being impressed with a Consideration higher than that of the Temporal interest of any man, To wit, the preservation of our Christian Testimony, which we think would be much affected by an attempt made by any friend, to set aside, or make void what we are constantly recommending as a necessary duty to our member's, making of wills whilst in health, and also called upon four times a year for a true account of friends care in this respect. It therefore appears to us a matter of great concernment and incumbent upon all, who are considered as brethren in Religious fellowship to be exceeding cautious how they move in a matter of this kind. Now in regard to this will of thy brother Seth's we are free to remark, knowing that little circumstances are often magnified by distant representations, and things that are only mere suggestions, sometimes carry with them the appearance and induce a belief that they are facts, when an impartial and true examination will prove them to be of no consequence.

It has been suggested that thy brother was impaired and not in capacity to make a Will. Had there been any suspicion of this kind at any time toward the close of his life, his having given a considerable part of his interest to one of his Nephews, was a circumstance that raised the curiosity of most men upon the Island, and whilst it was a topic of conversation, we are all well assured such a material defect would not have passed unnoticed by Friends. Among the many Remarks that a subject of this kind naturally produces.....His Will was finished about eight months before his death, and we fully believe, that he was of a sound mind at the time he made it, to which the Witnesses thereto, before the probate court affirmed, and continued to this time unshaken in their opinions about it.

From William Macy's having considerable share in this Estate, surmises have arisen and insinuations spread, that he might have practised undue arts to prepossess his Uncle in his favor, but we have no reason to believe that he took any steps inconsistant with Truth and honesty. The attention paid being purely from a sense of Duty due from a Nephew to an aged Uncle, and we believe the Will was dictated by Seth, free from the influence or direction of any person whatever; and we have not the least cause to think but what it would stand the test, and be confirmed in any Court that it can properly be brought before.

With desires that what we have here said may tend to thy satisfaction and reconcile thy mind in a state of resignation and content, we remain affectionately Thy well wishing Friends

RICHARD MITCHELL,
WILLIAM HUSSEY,
SILVANUS WORTH.

The clock descended to his son Joseph (38), and from him to Paul Macy (120) who took it with him to New Garden N. C., in 1773, and to Ohio in 1818, when he willed to his son Paul, who took possession of it in 1832, who shortly after gave it to his son Obed Macy, who has it at present at Troy, Alice Paddack was daughter of Joseph Paddack and Sarah Gardner, born at ; married at Nantucket, June 8, 1769; died at Nantucket, , 1783.

Ruth Macy (55), married Joseph Starbuck, son of Paul Starbuck and Ann Tibbets, born at Nantucket, , 1723; married at Nantucket, Aug. , 1744; died at Nantucket, Oct. 25, 1760.

Richard Macy (15) was but two years old when his father died, consequently through the early part of his life he was dependent upon his own resources to carve out his life's path as seemed best to him. He educated himself, and having a strong and inquiring mind he stored it with much useful and practical knowledge. He was, when quite young, apprenticed to a house carpenter, who chose rather to keep him actively at work, than to permit him to go to school, which, undoubtedly, in a great measure, was one of the causes of his great muscular strength for which he was so very noted. A short time before he became of age his master called him into the shop, and taking a piece of chalk and a board set some sums in addition and subtraction, which he performed, charging Richard to observe how they were done, and saying, "There, boy, that's the way to cipher, now go to your work." When he arrived at maturity, he was considered one of the strongest, if not the strongest man, in the country; his strength was estimated at greater than that of a horse. He at one time stopped a horse that was running away by catching hold of the end of the cart and pulling back with all his strength. He once lifted a cannon at Martha's Vineyard weighing 1,800 lbs. Another instance is related of his strength: he one day placed his hands and feet upon the ground and allowed his friends to place sacks of wheat upon his back. They placed thirteen there before he requested them to stop. They held two and one-half bushels each, making in the aggregate not far from two thousand pounds. In 1723 he built the first wharf on the island of Nantucket; he also built the first windmill. The latter he considered a difficult matter to undertake as he had never seen one. His mind became greatly absorbed upon the subject, and he one night dreamed how to construct the mill. He placed confidence in his dream, and instructed his workmen accordingly, and the result was a good strong windmill. He was of the Baptist persuasion in early life, but changed his views and joined the Society of Friends, in which society he became an elder. He continued a member of that society during the remainder of his life, and died at the advanced age of over ninety years.

Zaccheus Macy (50), for about forty years was the principal surgeon on the island of Nantucket, and during that time he performed over two thousand operations, for which he always declined to be paid. He felt it his Christian duty to serve his fellow men in that capacity, therefore he could not receive any pecuniary compensation. He appears to have inherited the energy of his great-grandfather, Thomas Macy, was a very prominent and exemplary man, much beloved and respected. He was very systematic in keeping his accounts, many of which are yet preserved, some of which are in possession of the writer. The following memorandum appears to be a list of the shipping he had owned during his life as it is evidently taken [drawed of] from his books so as to have it in a more concise form:

A letter from Zaccheus Macy, forwarding to the Historical Society of Massachusetts an account of the names of some old Sachems and Indians and giving the Indian divisions of the island, &c.

Nantucket y$^{e}$ 2$^{d}$ y$^{e}$ 10$^{mo}$ 1792

My Friend and Kinsman: — Agreeable to the request of the Massachusetts Historical Society, I have wrote and explained many words and names of certain parts and places of or on the island of Nantucket, both in English and Indian, as well as I could: but there is not one person now left that I can get any help from in these matters. So I have wrote as well as I can on the affairs or matters, but I sometimes almost fear, whether it may not seem flat and old to them, but I have not wrote anything but what I am very sure is true, according to the best account I could get. Further please to inform our said society, that I received a small letter from them, expressing their thanks for my little book I sent them before, which I kindly received and here return the same to them for their notice on such an old flat piece, and I have sent them an old stone pipe, such as our old native Indians made and smoked in, before the English came amongst them. They had a sort of weed or herb they called poke, which they used instead of tobacco, which weed resembled tobacco, but I do not know of any now growing on said island. The said pipe is something marred and broke, but still shows some considerable curiosity, but I only suppose it was made out of blue clay and muscle shells, pounded, and mixed, and then burnt, but it is commonly called a stone pipe. I once had a complete one, but it is lost. And I have sent them a shell taken out of my well thirty-nine feet below the face of the earth; and I have taken many sorts of shells out of wells near forty feet down. And one time when the old men were digging a well at the stage called Siasconset, it it said, they found a whale's bone near thirty feet below the face of the earth, which things are past our accounting for.

So I must break short, and only have to send you all my love and respect, which comes from your old and ready friend to serve

Zaccheus Macy

To Peleg Coffin Esquire, of
Nantucket, now resident in Boston

P. S. Please to take a copy of my last work or journal by reason I have not got it on my book all, for I have enlarged on many things and names, which we may want for our own curiosity.

To the Historical Society.

Wannochmamock was the first sachem at the south east part of the island, when the English first came to Nantucket. Next to him was his son called Sonsoauco and next to him were his two sons called Cain and Abel. These two agreed to divide the sachem-right, two third parts to Cain and one third part to Abel. The said Cain had one daughter, whose name was Jemima, married to James Shaa. From Abel sprang Eben Abel, and from him sprang Benjamin Abel, the last sachem, from whom I bought all his right, title and property that he had on said island, for and in behalf of the whole English proprietors. All the said Jamima's right was bought by our old proprietors many years before, as may fully appear on our records. Their lands or bounds began at a place on the south side of the island, called Touphchue Pond, and ran across to the northward to a brown rock marked on the west side, that lies to the northward of our washing pond, Called Gibb's Pond, on the west side of Saul's hills and so over towards Podpis swamp, and then to the eastward to a place, Sesacacha Pond by the east sea. At the south east part of said tract is a high bluff head of land, called Tom Never's Head; and about two miles to the northward stands our famous fishing stage houses, where our sick people go for their health, called Siasconset; and about a mile still to the northward is a very high cliff of land called Sancoto Head, then about a mile still to the northward stands another fishing stage called Sesacacha.

Next begins the old sachem called Wauwinet; his bounds begin adjoining to the northward of the said Wannochmamock's land and run still along to the northward and take in all Squam, and run on to our long sandy point, called Coetue or Nauma, which in the English is Long Point, where our Massachusetts light house now stands, and then to the westward to New Town, then to the southward to a place called Weweder Ponds, which in English signifies a pair of horns, by reason there are two ponds that run to a point next to the sea, and spread apart so as to leave a neck of land, called Long Joseph's Point; which two ponds spread apart so as to resemble a pair of horns. And the said Wauwinet had two sons the oldest son was named Isaac, but was mostly called Nicornoose, which signifies, in English, to suck the fore teat; and his second son was named Wawpordonggo, which in English is white face, for his face was one side white, and the other side brown or Indian color. And the said Nicornoose married, and had one son named Isaac, and one daughter; and then he turned away his proper wife, and took another woman and had two sons, named Wat and Paul Noose; and when his true son Isaac grew up to be a man, he resented his father's behavior so much, that he went off and left them for the space of near fifty years, it was not known where. And in that time his true sister married to one Daniel Spotsor, and, he reigned sachem, by his wife, near about forty years: and we made large purchases of the said Spotsors.

And then about sixty years past or more, there came an Indian man from Nanset, called Great Jethro, and he brought Judah Paddock and one Hanse with him, and he challenged the sachem right by being son to the said true son of Nicornoose, and when they first opened the matter to our old proprietors, they continued to keep the said Jethro close, until they could send some good committee to find out by our old Indians, whether they ever knew or heard of the said Nicornoose having such a son gone, and they soon found out by the old Indians, that he had, but they had not heard what was become of him. So they soon found, they should loose all they had bought of the said Spotsors, then they held a parley with him said Jethro, and agreed to buy all his right, title and property that he owned on said island, as appears on our records. And the said Nicornoose gave deeds to his two bastard sons Paul and Wat Noose, forty acres each, a little to the eastward of Podpis village. The first sachem at the south-west part of said island. His bounds were at the said Weweder Ponds, and from thence to the northward to a place called Gunsue meadow at Monemoy, where we now call New Town, and from thence westward along to the southward of the hills called Popsquatchet Hills, where our three mills now stand, and so to the west sea, called Tawtemeo, which we call the Hummock pond. And his name was Autapeeot. Next to him was his son called Harry Poritain. Next to him was Peter Mausauquit. Next to him was Isaac Peter. Next to him was lame Isaac, of whom we bought the last and all that sachem right: and their habitation was Moyaucomet, which signifies a meeting-place, and their meeting-house they call Moyaucomer. And the said Autapeeot was called a great warrior, and got his land by his bow.

The fourth sachem was at the north west part, called Poteonet, and owned all the little island called Tuckernuck, which signifies in English, a loaf of bread, and his bounds extended from Madaket down eastward to Wesko, which in English is the white stone, and so on the north side of Autapscot land, all bought of him at the coming of the English, saving some particular tracts that belong to the Jafets and the Hoights and some others.

Now I shall give some of the most respectable Indians in Wannochmamock's bounds. There was James Mamack, a minister of the gospel, and justice of the peace, and behaved well in his station. Old Aesop, the weaver, was a schoolmaster; old Saul, a very stern looking old man. Joshua Mamack succeeded in his father James Mamack's place. Richard Nominash and his brother Sampson and little Jethro were all very substantial, and a number more very trusty men.

The most noted Indians in Autapscot's bounds were Benjamin Tashama, a minister of the gospel, and a school-master to teach the children to read and write. He was grandson to the old sachem. But there was an old Indian, named Zacchary Hoite, a minister before the said Tashama, but he did not behave so well. He told his hearers they must do as he said, but not as he did.

And there was one Indian man, his name was James Skouel, but was mostly called Corduda. He was justice of the peace, and very sharp with them if they did not behave well. Hee would fetch them up, when they did not tend their corn well, and order them to have ten stripes on their backs, and for any rogue tricks and getting drunk. And if his own children played any rogue tricks, he would serve them the same sauce. There happened some Englishmen at his court, when a man was brought up for some rogue tricks, and one of these men was named Nathan Coleman, a pretty crank sort of a man, and the Indian man pleaded for an appeal to Esquire Bunker, and the old judge turned round to said Nathan and spoke thus "What do you think of this great business?" then said Nathan answered thus: "May be you had better whip him first, then let him go to Squire Bunker," and the old judge took Nathan's advice. And so Nathan answered two purposes, the one was to see the Indian whipped, the other was, he was sure the Indian would not want to go to Esquire Bunker for fear of another whipping.

I will say something more in recommendation of some of our old Indian natives. They were very solid and sober at their meetings of worship, and carried on in the form of Presbyterians, but in one thing imitated the Friends or Quakers, so called: which was to hold meetings on the first day of the week and on the fifth day of the week, and attended their meetings very precisely. I have been at their meetings many times and seen their devotion; and it was remarkably solid; and I could understand the most of what was said; and they always placed us in a suitable seat to sit; and they were not put by, by our coming in, but rather appeared glad to see us come in. And a minister is called coontaumuchary. And when the meeting was done, they would take their tinder-box and strike fire and light their pipes, and, may be, would draw three or four whifs and swallow the smoke, and then blow it out of their noses, and so hand their pipes to their next neighbor. And one pipe of tobacco would serve ten or a dozen of them. And they would say "tawpoot" which is, "I thank ye." It seemed to be done in a way of kindness to each other.

And as I said before, they had justices, constables, grand-jurymen, and carried on for a great many years, many of them very well and precisely, and lived in very good fashion. Some of them were weavers, some good carpenters.

* * * * * * * * * *

Now I will begin at the west end of the island, which we call Smith's Point, but the Indians Call Nopque, which was called a landing place, when they came from the Vineyard, but they call it Noapx; then eastward about three miles comes the Hummock Pond, where we once had a great number of whale houses with a mast raised for a look out, with holes bored through and sticks put in like a ladder, to go up; then about three miles eastward to the said Weweder ponds, stood another parcel of whale houses; then about three miles eastward to Nobedeer Pond was where Benjamin Gardner lived formerly; then about three and one half miles eastward is the aforesaid Tom Never's Head; then two miles to the northward is the famous town or fishing stage called Siasconset; then about one mile northward is the high head of land called Sancoty Head, and the Indians called Naphchecoy, which signifies round the head; then about one mile northward is the aforesaid Sesacacha pond, where our other fishing stage stands. Then begins the said Squam, and runs northward two miles to the beginning of our said long sandy point called Naauma; and the first is one mile to a place called Canskata pond, where are some woods and meadow; and four miles northward is where the said Massachusetts lighthouse is, on the north end of said point. Then about one mile to the northward of the entering on of the above said long point, begins another neck or beach, called little Coetue and runs about five miles on about a west by south course till it comes within about one mile of our town called Wesko, which makes the east side of the entering-in of our harbor. Then next to the said Squam, westward, is the village called Podpis Neck, where our fulling-mill stands; then next westward is the famous neck of land called Quaise or Maisquatuck Neck, which in the English signifies the reed land, which was a tract of land given to Thomas Mayhew from one of the old sachems, and was reserved by the said Mayhew to himself when he sold his patent right to the proprietors; which neck makes the west side of the said Podpis Harbor, now owned by Josiah Barker, Esquire, and Captain Shubael Coffin and Captain Thomas Delano. Then next westward is the Josiah Barker's lot or field, called Show Aucamor, which in English signifies the middle field of land. Then about four miles westward is the town called Wesco; then next westward is a place called Watercomet, which signifies a pond field, which formerly was owned by the old natives called the Hoites. Then next westward is the great pond called Cuppame, where old Tristram Coffin lived, the old grandfather to almost all of us, which was owned by the old families of the natives called the Jafets; then next westward about four miles is called Eel Point and Madaket Harbor, which is the north west part of the said island; and then about two miles westward is the said little island, called Tuckernuck, which signifies in English, a loaf of bread, for it appears round, and in the middle pretty high.: which was bought by the said old Tristram Coffin from the old sachem Potconet, in the year 1659, by virtue of a patent he had from New York.

Excuse me for errors and poor writing and spelling, and consider me in station of life worn out.

Benj.a Coffin Clerk

Caleb Macy during the greater part of his minority assisted his father in the milling business, after which he learned the trade of shoemaking; but his health becoming impaired, in addition to a naturally feeble constitution, he concluded to adopt some other pursuit. Thinking that sea voyages would be of benefit to him he followed it for several years on coasting and whaling voyages. At the age of thirty he married, gave up going to sea and returned to his trade, which business he carried on quite extensively and profitably. He invested largely in land, and at one time owned one-thirtieth part of the island of Nantucket. During the revolutionary war he lost a large portion of his property; but his loss occasioned him but little uneasiness, as his immediate wants were few and his children had grown up to maturity, and in positions not to require his pecuniary aid. He continued his farming and shoemaking business on a small scale until near the close of his life. He was a man of excellent character, possessed of deep religious convictions, charitable in the highest degree, and scrupulously honest in all his dealings. His conduct through life was such as to win him hosts of friends, who knew that to follow his example was to win the coveted title of "good and faithful servant."

Rose Pinkham was daughter of Reuben Pinkham and Ann Starbuck, born at Nantucket, Feb. 22, 1758; married at Nantucket, Dec. 3, 1778; died at New York, Nov. 7, 1853.

Ann Macy (211), married Peleg Slocum Folger, son of George Folger and Rebecca Howland, born at Nantucket, Sept. 3, 1780; married at Nantucket, Oct. , 1801; died at Nantucket, Feb. 21, 1842.

Avis Macy (214), married Charles Barney, son of Daniel Barney and Lydia Coffin, born at Nantucket, March 12, 1791; married at Nantucket, Feb. , 1812; died at New Orleans, La., , 1841.

Eliza Macy (218), married Joseph Havens of Canada; married at ; died at Saint Louis, Mo.,

Jonathan Macy (83) was recorded on the Nantucket Records as "Mariner." He commanded a coast wise vessel and would take a cargo of oils, candles, whalebone, etc., to Philadelphia or Baltimore, sell them himself and purchase with the proceeds a return cargo of flour, staves, iron, etc., for fitting out whale ships. He appeared to entertain a strong conviction in the continued prosperity of the island of Nantucket, as he invested largely in real estate there. There is still considerable property on the island standing in his name on the Book of Records. His wife lived to the advanced age of ninety-five years eight months and fifteen days. She retained her faculties in a remarkable degree until a short time prior to her death.

A few years before her death she had her daguerreotype taken, with the following members of her family beside her: her son Josiah Macy (212), her grandson William H. Macy (568), her great-granddaughter Mary J. Kingsland ( ), and her great-great-grandson Cornelius Kingsland, making in all five generations, living at one time, and having their likenesses taken at the same moment. Their ages amounted to 222 years.

January 14th, 1868. This day the spirit of Cornelius Kingsland passed from earth to heaven. As he was the youngest in the picture of the five generations, and as a kind Providence had willed it that I should stand beside his death bed, and listen to his last parting words, I digress from the direct Macy descent to let my readers see the result of a pure life. He was an only child, and an only grandchild on his father's side, surrounded by everything to make life attractive and desirable, brought up in the very lap of luxury, and having traveled over Europe and this country; yet he was uncontaminated by mingling with the world. He was idolized by his relations and beloved by his friends, but in his twentieth year, after a severe sickness of three weeks, he passed away without a struggle and without a longing for earth. Turning to his mother, whose heart was breaking at his bedside, he said, "Farewell, dearest mother, my heavenly father's arm is around me and I am going to rest in Christ." He spoke beautifully to those around him, saying "Do not cry for me, I am so happy." "I am going where they marry not, neither are they given in marriage." He wished to be remembered to his friends, saying, "My friends have all been so kind to me." Then kissing his parents, and looking towards each one around him, bidding them a last farewell by his looks, his voice having failed, he turned his eyes towards heaven, smiled the smile of an angel, and the lamp flickered and flickered and went out. Death had no sting, and the grave claimed no victory. He leaves but pleasant memories behind him, his life was all goodness, all truthfulness, and all purity. His funeral was one of the largest ever attended in this city in memory of one so young; at least five hundred mourners were there. Eight of his young friends, with white scarfs and gloves, carried the casket containing his earthly remains, and few who witnessed that procession will ever have it obliterated from their memory. His young friends loved him, and they moved with that slow tread that betokened reverence for the character and life of him that had gone before them. His remains were placed in a catacomb in the Kingsland vault at Greenwood, and on the tablet beneath his name are the words, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

Reuben Macy (135) removed from Nantucket with his family, and settled at Hudson, N. Y., or more properly speaking, Claverack Landing, in 1783 or 1784. The city of Hudson was founded by settlers from Nantucket, Providence and Martha's Vineyard, after the manner of the original purchase of the island of Nantucket. Many descendants of the first settlers or proprietors of Hudson still reside there. The following extract from Miller's Sketches of Hudson will show who were the original proprietors, and how their association was formed:

Proprietors' Association.

At an early period of the Revolution, the whale fisheries of Nantucket were broken up by the English marine. In the year 1783, a considerable number of the inhabitants of the island, desirous of bettering their fortunes, determined to leave it, and make a settlement somewhere upon the Hudson river. The enterprise doubtless originated at Providence, but was joined by others from Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard. Thomas Jenkins, to whom more than any other individual it owed its success, although a native of Nantucket, was at the time a resident of Providence, and a wealthy merchant.

In the spring of 1783, he formed an association, to consist of not more than thirty members, all of whom should be merchants, or "concerned in navigating the deep." It was joined in Providence by Thomas and Seth Jenkins, David Lawrence, Hezekiah Dayton, Nathaniel Greene, Samuel Mansfield, William Wall, John Thurston, John Alsop, and Cotton Gelston. In July, 1783, Cotton Gelston proceeded to Nantucket, where it was joined by Stephen Paddock, Joseph Barnard, Charles Jenkins, Deborah Jenkins, Gideon Gardner, Reuben Folger, Alexander Coffin, Benjamin Hussey, Shubael Worth, Paul Hussey, Benjamin Folger, Reuben Macy, Walter Folger, Benjamin Starbuck and John Cartwright. The two last named did not, however, come with the others. On his return, Mr. Gelston stopped at Edgartown, Martha's Vineyard, where Marshall and Lemuel Jenkins, Peleg Clark and John Allen, also united with the enterprise. At Newport it was joined by William Minturn. Ezra Reed and Titus Morgan joined in after they had purchased Claverack Landing.

The articles of agreement subscribed by them were the following:

Articles of Agreement.

We, the subscribers, being joint proprietors of a certain Tract of Land lying at Claverack Landing on the banks of the Hudson River, purchased by Thomas Jenkins of Peter Hogeboom, Junr., and others, for the purpose of establishing a commercial settlement, on principles of equity, do enter into the following Articles of Agreement to wit:—

Article the First.

That each proprietor subscribe for such part of the above Tract, in proportion as near as may be to his Stock in Trade, with the others concerned.

Article the Second.

No person shall be permitted to purchase lands within two miles of the said landing, unless he shall give the Proprietors the refusal thereof at the rates at which he himself purchased it.

Article Third.

That each and every one of the proprietors shall settle there in person and carry his Trading Stock on or before the first day of October, A. Dom., one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, unless prevented by some unavoidable event that shall be esteemed a sufficient reason by some of the proprietors for his non-compliance, and his going immediately after that obstruction is removed. In case of Death his heirs, executors or administrators, with fully complying with these Articles, shall be entitled to the same privileges as other proprietors.

Article Fourth.

That no person be permitted to dispose of his share who has not fully complied with these Articles, but said share revert to the other Proprietors, they paying the first cost of said share without interest, and that the proprietors, which have complied with the foregoing, shall hold possession of lands according to their several proportions.

Article Fifth.

That no proprietor be permitted to enter any building on any proprietor's land, until it shall be divided, and they shall be subjected to such regulations as shall be hereafter made for regulating the Streets, Lanes, Highways, Gangways, &c.

Article Sixth.

That we further agree that if any one or more shall forfeit the right of his or their interest in the aforementioned lands, according to the true intent and meaning of the preceding articles, that he or they, shall if furnished with Deeds or other Instruments of conveyance, from Thomas Jenkins, give up the same to the Proprietors, or furnish them with a clear Deed or Deeds of all their right, title and interest in said lands, they paying such person or persons the first cost as described in article fourth.

Article Seventh.

That the subscribers do solemnly agree to abide by the preceding Articles and regulations, and that this Instrument be signed and sealed by each individual proprietor, and the original be lodged in the hands of the Proprietor's Clerk.

Where these articles of agreement were executed does not appear. It is said the original was dated at Providence. All the proprietors do not appear to have signed them. This is explained by the fact that two or three did not continue members, and the shares of some were included and covered by the signatures of the other proprietors.

For the purpose of selecting a suitable site, a committee was chosen by them, and sent, probably in the summer of 1783, to sail up the river and examine different localities. Thomas Jenkins and Cotton Gelston were a part of that committee, with two others whose names we do not know; nor do we know whether they were empowered to effect a purchase, or to what extent they proceeded in a negotiation, before reporting to the islanders. We have not been able to get back of the fact of such committee being sent. They were urged at New York by Col. Rutgers to make a purchase upon the East river, and came near doing so. They tarried, too, at Poughkeepsie, with a view of purchasing; but desirous of making a full examination of the river, proceeded, and finally made selection of Claverack Landing, as the site of the "future city." The purchase when made was in the name of Thomas Jenkins, and by him the lands were deeded to the other proprietors. Five hundred pounds was paid down as part of the purchase money. What decided them in their selection does not appear—probably the natural beauty of the position, connected with the fact that it was in the vicinity of a tolerably thickly settled and thriving farming population, and at the head of ship navigation. Notwithstanding the early success of the enterprise, the selection in after years proved not to have been judicious. It has always been contended by many, that had the location of the settlement been upon the west side of the river, the career of its prosperity could not have been checked, and Hudson could not have failed to become what Albany now is. Of the correctness of this view it is not the province of the writer to speak. Whatever may be said of the position in a business point of view, it is not surpassed by any upon the river for healthfulness and the beauty of the scenery surrounding it. The sagacity of those "men of old" may have been at fault; but let us be grateful to them, at least, that they have made us a "city upon an hill," with the beautiful and grand in nature upon every side of us.

In the fall of 1783, two families arrived here from Nantucket. It would be interesting to know who those "first families" were; but we have been able to ascertain only one of them, that was the family of Seth Jenkins. The first child born after the purchase was Elizabeth Bunker, who died while young.

She belonged to a family who appear to have left Nantucket some years previous and settled in Dutchess county, coming to Hudson as soon as they heard of the purchase. In the spring of 1784, the other proprietors followed with their families, bringing with them several vessels, and in some instances the frames of dwellings, prepared at Nantucket, for erection upon their arrival.

Priscilla Macy (433), married Paul Ray, son of John Ray and Mary Macy (156), born at Nantucket, Aug. 16, 1765; married at Nantucket, March 27, 1794; died at Nantucket, Dec. 7, 1846.

Miriam Macy (437), married George Prince of Sweden, who left that country in 1790, in care of Capt. Paul Ray, and came to Nantucket, where he married, born Oct. 24, 1780; married July 17, 1804; died at St. Thomas, West Indies, Dec. 24, 1812.

Zephaniah C. Macy (439), lived to be nearly eighty-five years of age, and never left the island of Nantucket but once, and then only for a few days. Not until he was sixty-seven years of age could he be prevailed upon to leave the island. When he finally yielded to the entreaties of his friends a party of them took him to New Bedford, and from there to Fall River. His astonishment at the wonderful sights which met his gaze on every side was truly interesting to behold. The locomotive particularly claimed his attention, and he examined it with care, and watched its immense power with wonder. Whilst at Fall River he noticed one of the Sound steamers, the Bay State, at the wharf. Being a larger steamer than he had ever seen before, he walked down on the wharf and paced off her length. Capt. Brown of the Bay State asked him how long he made her; to which Mr. Macy replied, giving the number of feet according to his pacing, when Capt. Brown remarked that it was within one foot of her exact measurement. Capt. Brown was very anxious to take him to New York to show him that great metropolis, and tendered him the finest stateroom on the boat; but all persuasions were unavailing: he said he felt that he had already seen more than he could realize; that he was a long way from home, and that he felt anxious to get back, insinuating that if he lived to get back to Nantucket he would never be caught off the island again. He visited some of the cotton mills at Fall River, and he looked upon the thousands of spindles revolving with lightning rapidity, as though they were endowed with consciousness, or were something more than human.

Eunice Macy (448), married Thaddeus Coleman, son of Elihu Coleman and Elizabeth Macy (83), born at Nantucket, ; married at Ghent, N. Y., ; died at Henrietta, N. Y., .

Rachel Macy (450), married Barnabas Coleman, son of Elihu Coleman and Elizabeth Macy (83), born at Nantucket, ; married at Ghent, N. Y., ; died at Rochester, N. Y., , 1848.

Deborah Macy (453), married Laban Bunker, son of Richard Bunker and Eunice Mitchell, born at Nantucket, June 30, 1783; married at Ghent, N. Y., May 2, 1804; died at Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1844.

Abraham Macy (170),resided on Nantucket, until the year 1773, at which time, he with his family left the island, and settled at a place called Quaker Hill, Dutchess Co., N. Y. He resided at that place during the revolutionary struggle that ultimately severed these United States from the crown of England. Although he did not engage in the conflict by taking up arms — he being a member of the Society of Friends, and opposed in principle to the taking of human life — he, in common with many others, had to suffer more or less in various ways, the consequences growing out of the demoralizing influences that are ever engendered by war! During that eventful period, he was engaged in selling goods, having a store-room in one part of his dwelling. At one time some half dozen American soldiers called and asked for lodgings during the night, and, to induce a favorable answer, added, that many robberies were being committed by a band of lawless banditti, and if any attempt of that kind was made, that they would protect the family at all hazards. He informed them, that they were not in a situation to accommodate them, and if they were, he could not accept their proffered aid, as his dependence for preservation was not upon deadly weapons, nor could he consent for any one to use them for his own or family's protection.

It so happened that two nights thereafter the house was assailed by a band of robbers. At this time four young women, two of whom were his elder daughters, were sleeping in an adjoining room to the one occupied by Abraham and his wife. The other two were visitors. As soon as he discovered that the house was being entered, having by him at that time in a bag $350 in silver, he immediately took it to his daughters for safe keeping. They fearing to take it, one of the visitors (Hannah Jenkins afterwards Barnard, who afterwards became an eminent minister in the Society of Friends and a woman of much notoriety), said, "Hand it to me, I am not afraid to take it." This was the work of a moment only, by which time two ruffians, disguised and fully armed, had entered the room. Abraham was ordered to light a candle, and they then demanded his money, the key to the store room, etc. They gathered up about $300 worth of goods, and from the drawer took some $30 or $40 in Continental money — of more value then perhaps than after — searching other parts of the house, took what silver they could find consisting mostly of spoons. One of the robbers demanded his watch: being told that he had none, he pointed his pistol at him, saying, "Deliver your watch instantly, or I will blow you through." He told him he could shoot him if he chose, for he could not deliver what he did not possess.

As a finale to their work of plunder, one of the robbers took up the shoes belonging to Abraham's wife, and proceeded to remove the silver buckles that were attached. She, discovering this, said, "Shame on the man that will rob a woman of her shoe buckles," when he spitefully threw them down, and, with an oath, said, "Keep your shoe buckles." Although but two robbers had entered the house, Abraham discovered there were several of the band fully armed outside stationed at each window and door. While all this alarming scene of plunder had been going on, not one other of the family had left their beds (trusting in quietness for preservation), nor had they been molested; and thus, the bag of silver remained undiscovered to benefit the family after in their stripped condition! Sixteen years after these events had transpired, a young woman discovered in a stone chimney not very far away, six of the silver tea spoons which were then taken. And, although Abraham and his family had years before left that neighborhood, there were those still, who remembered the circumstance of the robbery; and the initials A. P. M., being still visible, although an unsuccessful attempt had been made to obliterate them. Being afterwards presented to the family, they were at once recognized, and the narrator of these events now has one of these same spoons in his possession, which is prized as a memento of the eventful scenes and trials our fathers passed through when the desolations of war came home appallingly to the fireside of the domestic circle!

From Quaker Hill he with his family moved to Hudson, N. Y., remaining there but a short time, purchased a farm and settled in what is now called the town of Ghent. The country at that time being comparatively new, he with his large family of ten children, had many deprivations and severe trials to pass through. The settlers that preceded them were of German descent, some of whom kept slaves, were uncultivated, intemperate, apparently not half civilized, and none too honest, made the first few years of their sojourn anything but pleasant. At one time, soon after he had settled in his new home, six fatted pigs were stolen just as they were to be put up; at another time a fatted beef was driven off, and many other depredations were committed. Their losses were bitterly felt at a time when it was with great difficulty that a sufficiency of food could be obtained or produced for the daily supply of a large family. During all these days of suffering and trial, he lived out the Christian and nonresistant principle, of "doing good for evil," and by his sterling integrity and upright walk, in time exerted an influence for good upon those around him, and long lived to see the neighborhood filled up with a respectable and entirely different class of inhabitants, he departing in peace at the advanced age of eighty-two years. He was a man possessed of an enlarged mind, of liberal and comprehensive views; and few men of his day were better read in ancient or modern history than was he. So far reaching and comprehensive were his views with regard to the future of this country, that he often amused his credulous listeners by predicting the use of steam as a motive power, and the opening of extensive canals etc., very many years before these improvements were contemplated by the public mind, which show that he was a man of much sagacity.

In closing this account we will add, that when first settling in this neighborhood he, with his large family of ten children, for two years lived in a log house containing two small rooms with bedroom attached. At the expiration of that time, and eighty-one years ago now, he, with his own hands, erected a frame dwelling, and he who has narrated the foregoing events, now occupies that same dwelling.

The above sketch was furnished by George G. Macy, grandson of Abraham, the subject of this sketch.

No children.

Phebe Gardner was daughter of Jonathan Gardner and Miriam Worth, born at Nantucket, August 25, 1753; married at Nantucket, , 1774; died at Nantucket, Feb. 3, 1838.

Elisha Macy was of a slender constitution, never at any time of life strong or robust, or capable of much hard labor. Early in life he manifested a strong inclination for study. He commenced the trade of shoemaking, but his mind was so occupied with books that he abandoned the trade. He made several whaling voyages, but that not proving satisfactory to his turn of mind he gave up going to sea, determined to follow the bent of his inclination. He established himself as a school teacher, and his manner of teaching was so pleasing to his pupils that he generally had as many scholars as he could manage. He particularly excelled in arithmetic and navigation. His close application for many years compelled him reluctantly to abandon his school on account of his health. He was never known to have any difficulty with any one of his fellow men: he would rather suffer a wrong than do a wrong act. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and his deportment through life corresponded with the religious professions of the society.

Abigail Pinkham was daughter of Daniel Pinkham and Eunice Jenkins, born at Nantucket, Dec. 7, 1764; married at Nantucket, Feb. 2, 1786; died at Nantucket, Oct. 23, 1842.

Elizabeth Macy (473), married Edmund W. Macy (484), son of Edmund Macy and Susanna Coleman, born at Nantucket, May 23, 1795; married at Nantucket, April 3, 1817; died at , July 22, 1858.

Eunice Macy (476), married David Mitchell, son of James Mitchell of R. I., and Elizabeth Anthony, born at , Nov. 17, 1799; married at Nantucket, Nov. 4, 1824; resides at Nantucket.

Obed Macy's parents had a large family of children, and, as during his early life, their means were quite limited, he had few opportunities for acquiring an education. During the revolutionary war he labored at shoemaking and farming. In 1783, he followed his inclination to go to sea, and was engaged three short voyages in the whaling business, when he abandoned the pursuit, because of a belief that his moral character was thereby endangered, being many times shocked by the habits and language of the sailors with whom he was compelled to associate. He had been bred as a member of the Society of Friends, with whom he maintained his connection until his death. He returned to his trade as a shoemaker for a short time, and then entered into partnership with his brother Silvanus: they fitted out vessels in the whaling, fishing and coasting trade, and amassed considerable wealth, a large portion of which they lost by the French seizures in 1798, and by the captures of the English in the war of 1812. The partnership continued for forty-seven years, and until the death of Silvanus. During their whole business connection the most perfect harmony prevailed between them; and so strong was their love for each other, that their whole property, including even their furniture, was held in common, and no account was kept of family expenses, each purchasing and paying from the common fund for whatever he desired.

The subject of this sketch was at all times very precise and systematic, and much interested in the statistical history of Nantucket, which title he gave to a work published in 1835. His character is shown by a few words written by himself: "I never was guilty of swearing an oath in my life; I never told a lie since I was a child; I never willfully wronged a person of a sixpence; I never purloined another's property; I never played at cards; I never was where fiddling and dancing were carried on five minutes; I never played at any game where anything was at stake; I never drank spirits to intoxication." He commenced Jan. 1, 1799, keeping a daily record of important events, which he continued until about the close of his life, filling six large volumes. They are replete with valuable and interesting items. During the latter part of his life he lost the use of one of his eyes, but retained his mental faculties until the very last.

John W. Macy of Winchester, Ind., who has rendered great service in collecting information for this work from the Indiana branches, and who traveled some distance to see William Macy (202), writes as follows in regard to him: "He removed from North Carolina with his father to Jefferson Co., Tenn., where he resided until the year 1720, when he removed to Wayne Co., in this state (Indiana), where, by dint of industry and economy, he accumulated a competence; and by his acts of kindness and charity won a place in the hearts of all who knew him. He was for many years a member of the board of commissioners for this county. He is now very old (eighty-one years) and feeble bodily; but his mind seems as youthful and vigorous as ever. He heartily sympathizes with you in your undertaking, and sends you his best wishes, and prays that you may be abundantly successful. Seeing him so cheerful now that he can almost feel his feet touching the 'cold waters' is an incentive to me to fight the great battle of life on the side of right and justice; for what must be the quiet joy of that old man feeling that he has done his duty; that he has stood to his post in the hour of danger and that the relief is coming at last. Such men do not live in vain, neither do they ever die."

AM PHOTO LITHOGR. CO. N.Y. OSBORN'S PROCESS

William R. Austin of Boston, born April 6, 1807; married at New York, Nov. 4, 1850; resides at Boston, Mass.

Ann Eliza Macy (573), married Isaac Macy (1028), son of Thomas Macy and Elizabeth Swain, born at Nantucket, Jan. 27, 1818; married at New York, Nov. 6, 1839; resides at Nantucket.

In taking a retrospective view of the life of Josiah Macy, it presents one of profound goodness. It is not in the legislative halls that his voice has been heard, nor in public assemblages; but it is in the quiet social walks of life where his influence has been felt and his deeds have been recorded. From his first entrance upon the commercial stage of life every act appears to have been controlled by justice, equity and moral right, and he retired from active business with a record second to none, with a character unblemished, loved, honored and respected by all who had ever had business relations with him. The accumulation of money seared not his heart, but enabled him more readily to bestow his offerings to the poor and needy. The deadening influence of selfishness never coursed through his veins. He has always maintained the character of a Christian gentleman in its fullest sense. His hospitality and politeness are proverbial characteristics. With him profanity was a sin; and during his seafaring life he not only was never known to utter an oath, but strove to prevent it in others. It has frequently been remarked that the officers and men under his command so soon learned to love and respect him, that they invariably avoided the use of profane language in his presence. He has always been a member of the Society of Friends, and for many years an elder in that society. His whole life has been marked by his abiding faith in the wisdom and goodness of his Heavenly Father, putting full trust in Him and resigning himself to His will. During a severe illness a few years since, when his sufferings were very great, and even when the knife of the surgeon had to be called into requisition, he displayed great Christian fortitude, and frequently, when his children were by his bedside, would he assure them of the happiness he felt in having passed his life in the manner in which he had, and that he felt perfectly resigned to await the calling of his Maker. He has been the means of turning many from the paths of vice by his example, kind actions and advice. A much respected member of society stated to me a few years since with much feeling that when a young man he placed little or no restraint upon himself, yielding himself up to the gratification of all sorts of pleasures until wine had almost the complete mastery of him; that he went abroad, squandered what money he had, and became a vile drunkard, when kind Providence sent Josiah Macy to a certain city in Europe, and to use his words as near as I can recollect them, he said, "Josiah Macy lifted me from the gutter a drunkard, took me to his hotel, and by his kind watchfulness and Christian care reformed me, and to him with divine assistance am I indebted for what I am to-day." Captain Morrell, in his work called Four Voyages, pays a handsome tribute to him, which I annex. In answer to a letter asking for a sketch of his seafaring life, he writes so full and interesting a sketch that I subjoin it in full. It is written in, a very clear hand, and is valued as an autograph letter written in his eighty-third year. In 1866, he purchased a large plot at Woodlawn cemetery, which he presented to his male descendants, that they and their families who retained the name of Macy might find a final resting place for their remains. His children and grandchildren have had a granite monument placed in the centre of the plot with the name of MACY engraved on each side. The plot is ..... feet in circumference, capable of containing the remains of many hundreds of his descendants. His life, his high sense of honor and integrity, his unscrupulous honesty, his kind heartedness, and gentlemanly bearing towards all, and his unwavering faith, are examples not only for his descendants but for all mankind. The City Fire Insurance Company of New York was incorporated by an act of the legislature, passed April 26, 1833. The first directors were Preserved Fish, Cornelius W. Lawrence, Josiah Macy, Abraham Bell, Robert Hicks, Robert J. Walker, Thomas Leggett, Jr., Thomas J. Townsend, William H. Falls, John D. Wight, John Barrow, Joseph W. Corlies, Isaac Frost, Benjamin Clark, James Hall, Thomas Hunt, Edward A. Wight, Amos Willets, William C. White, Peter S. Titus and David S. Brown. Twelve out of the twenty-one have been called from earth, and four out of the remaining nine still retain their positions as directors, namely: Josiah Macy, John D. Wight, William C. White and Peter S. Titus, making nearly thirty-five years in which they have acted in that capacity. The accompanying photo-lithograph of what was known as a Mediterranean pass is of historical interest. They protected our shipping from the depredations of the Algerine pirates in the Mediterranean — the United States government having made a treaty with them, which exempted our vessels. They were printed on parchment, and the upper portion cut off, which the Algerines retained a fac simile of, by which they could detect the genuineness of those presented to them — not being able to read they would match them.

In a Narrative of Four Voyages written by Capt. Benjamin Morrell, the author says: "I was justly considered a very 'wild youth.' How long I should have continued in this thoughtless career of folly it is not easy to determine, had not Divine Providence raised up for me a faithful friend and adviser in the person of Capt. Josiah Macy, master of the ship Edward of New York, belonging to Samuel Hicks and himself. On a voyage to Calcutta, this worthy man, who is a pattern of all shipmasters, took me from before the mast, and by his watchfulness and fatherly advice directed my attention to more manly and useful pursuits; nor did he remit his guardian care until he saw me master of a ship.

"Thus was I delivered from the path of indiscretion, which too often conducts to ruin, by the unsolicited friendship and benevolent feelings of an entire stranger, who long acted towards me the part of a parent and a tutor; laboring incessantly to supply the glaring defects of my education, and to eradicate from my mind the seeds of folly, and plant in their stead the seeds of useful knowledge."

To the President and Directors of the Tradesmen's Bank, New York:

Having taken up my residence most of the time in the country, which renders my attendance at the board very inconvenient, I therefore wish to resign my situation as a director.

I sincerely hope the same prosperity and high standing may always continue, that has marked the progress of the bank since my connection with it, which is upwards of thirty years.

It is a pleasure to me to look back on the united feeling that has always existed among the officers and directors for the prosperity of the institution, and the kindness, consideration, and good feeling that has always been manifested towards each other. With my kind regards to all, I remain your assured friend,

JOSIAH MACY.

TRADESMEN'S BANK, NEW YORK, April 12th, 1862.

Josiah Macy, Esq.

Dear Sir: The board of directors of this bank, in deference to your wishes, at their last meeting accepted the resignation heretofore tendered by you, and have instructed me to forward to you a copy of a resolution passed by them as follows:

"WHEREAS, Josiah Macy, Esq., has tendered his resignation as a director of the Tradesmen's Bank, in consequence of his removal from the city, and the board of directors in reluctantly accepting the same, are desirous of expressing to him the high estimate they entertain of his services, as a director of the bank, do therefore

"Resolve, that the directors of the Tradsesmen's Bank feel deep and sincere regret to learn from Mr. Macy, his desire of resigning an office which he has so ably filled for the long period of thirty-two consecutive years. That, from an association of so many years standing, they have learned to esteem him as a gentleman of direct purpose, great amiability and integrity of character. That they feel great reluctance to accept a resignation, which deprives the institution of the aid of his valuable business experience; and that in retiring from the board he bears with him the respect and esteem of every member thereof, with their best wishes for his future health and happiness."

Respectfully yours,
ANTHONY HALSEY, Cashier.

Silvanus J. Macy.

My dear Grandson: Thy very acceptable letter came duly to hand, and I am glad to hear that you all enjoyed your visit on the island of Nantucket. I think thee has been very industrious in collecting information respecting the descendants of Thomas Macy, one of the first white men who settled on the island, and from whom I believe all the Macys are descendants. I notice thee wishes me to give thee all the information I have respecting my immediate relatives. Thee has been so thorough in making thy examinations that I have scarcely anything to add. Thee asks whether my grandfather was ever a minister in the Society of Friends; I think he was not, but I believe he was an elder, as was also my grandmother for many years. Their children were all members of the Society of Friends, and lived and died as such. As thee wished some incidents of my life, I will now mention some few which may be interesting to thee and others of my descendants. I commenced following the sea when quite young. Jonathan Macy, my father, I believe was the first one of the descendants of Thomas Macy that followed the sea. He was master of a vessel for a number of years in the coasting trade between Philadelphia and Nantucket. The cargoes of oils, candles, whalebone, etc., which he took away, were consigned to him for sale, and with the proceeds of which he would purchase return cargoes for the outfits of the whaling ships. My first voyage to sea was with him. After I was about fifteen years of age I followed the sea very steadily in the coasting trade, which was then very extensive from the island, as the fleet of whaling ships was large. For several years most of the sperm oil imported into the United States was manufactured on the island, and of course its product sent away for a market. This gave me a good opportunity to learn to be a sailor, and something about business. In 2nd month, 1805, I was married, soon after which I took command of the sloop Hero, then about three months more than twenty years of age: took on board a cargo and sailed for Baltimore, Md. The cargo was consigned to me, which I sold, and purchased a return cargo: made quite a short and satisfactory little voyage to myself, and I believe to all concerned. I think I can say that I felt as happy then as at any period of my life, and as well satisfied with my position. My spirits were buoyant with hope, although my means as to property were small; but that gave me not the least uneasiness; my confidence was strengthened by friends coming forward, and offering to join me in buying or building any kind of a vessel that I wanted. As the Hero was rather small to beat along the coast in winter, after this voyage was ended I purchased one-quarter of a schooner called the Mount Hope between 90 and 100 tons. I made several voyages in her to Baltimore and Philadelphia. Late in the autumn of 1806, after I came home, we concluded to load the Mount Hope with a cargo of whale oil, whalebone, etc., for Marseilles. Took on board part of the cargo, went to New Bedford, finished loading, and sailed, I think, in 1st or 2nd month, 1807, with liberty to go to any port for a market in case I received information to warrant changing. After sailing up the Mediterranean as far as Cape De Gat, I learned from a source that I could depend upon, that I could not sell the cargo at Marseilles, except at a great loss; I immediately determined to go out of the Mediterranean, and try some other port. I stopped at Gibraltar, then at Cadiz, and then at Lisbon, where I sold the cargo very well, and was favored to return safe home, and wound up the voyage profitably, and to the full satisfaction of all concerned, as well as some commendation for my perseverance. Business now was very dull, as these were the days of nonintercourse laws and embargos, the forerunner and beginning of troubles that led to the war with Great Britain in 1812. After my return from Lisbon, I made several coasting voyages.

In first month, 1808, news was received at Nantucket that an embargo was or would be laid, stopping all vessels from leaving the United States for any foreign port. It was concluded at once to load the Mount Hope with a cargo of whale oil and sperm candles, and I was to leave in her and go in search of a market in the north of Spain, to clear for Corunna; and if I could not sell it there, then try Bilboa, or, in fact, go any where I pleased. She was finished loading during the day, and that night was towed out of the harbor by a number of whale boats, manned by a goodly number of volunteers, but grounded on the bar where she lay until the next high tide when she floated off, and I proceeded on the voyage. It was quite a relief when I found myself passing the light house on Great Point, as we had been under considerable anxiety from the time we commenced loading, not knowing what moment official information might come of the embargo and the voyage be broken up. My mind was a good deal exercised after I consented to undertake the voyage: our government was in a very unsettled state, the French, Berlin and Milan decrees were in force, and the English orders in council in opposition to them. Paper blockades seemed the order of the day in Europe; and embargos and nonintercourse acts was the policy of our government to counteract them. Our foreign commerce was harrassed very much at that time by France and England. Our seamen were forcibly taken from our vessels on the high seas by English men of war, and compelled to serve on board their ships, which was one of the causes of the war of 1812. From this time until war was declared, there was much care and anxiety in our foreign trade. The beginning of this voyage was not pleasant to me: starting in the middle of winter in a deep loaded vessel, a little less than one hundred tons, to cross the Atlantic; the cargo hurried on board in the way it was pushed off in the haste that was necessary; and to go and look for a market; however, when we take hold of the plow we must not look back, so I concluded to do the best that I could. About ten days out in a severe gale sprung the foremast. When near Fayal, where I was heading to repair damages, I was boarded by a British cruiser, and ordered not to enter any ports in the bay of Biscay, as they were in a state of blockade that was done under the British orders in council. I arrived at Fayal, repaired the foremast, sold my cargo, and delivered it there and at St. Michaels and Terceira, and returned safe back with a cargo of wine, oranges and specie, proceeds of outward cargo, making a very fair and satisfactory voyage. After my return I made a few voyages between Boston and Philadelphia as business was very dull on the island on account of political affairs, many being afraid to send their ships away on long whaling voyages.

In the spring of 1809 it was proposed to make up a cargo for the West Indies, and I was solicited to go and take charge of the cargo and sell it, which I declined, and sold my one-fourth of the Mount Hope. I then took charge of a schooner about one hundred tons, and made a few trips coast-wise. In the spring of 1810 I purchased five-eighths of the brig Little William, made a trip to Philadelphia and New York and back to Nantucket, put her in good order and sailed for Philadelphia, where I chartered her to go to Alexandria, Va., and load with flour for Cadiz, I believe at $2.75 per barrel. I arrived in Alexandria 6th month, 1810; the brig was loaded for Cadiz by William Hartshorn, who I found a very kind and pleasant friend; from him and his family I received a great deal of attention. After I discharged the cargo at Cadiz I chartered the brig to take part of a cargo of sugar and cocoa to go up the Mediterranean to Valencia, and then take a cargo of fruit for Philadelphia. I was detained a long time at Valencia waiting for a cargo; about one month on demurrage, and finally loaded at a small port called Denia. I arrived safely at Philadelphia in 3d month, 1811, delivered the cargo and sold the brig; took passage for Nantucket in the sloop Hancock, Capt. Cromwell Barnard; found my family all well after an absence of about eleven months. The voyage wound up very satisfactorily to myself and the other owners.

I had not been on the island long when a proposition was made to me to take charge of a small brig called the Bonif, go to New York, load her with flour, corn, oil, sperm candles, etc., and go to Madeira and dispose of them, which I accepted, and soon sailed for New York. I performed the voyage, sold the cargo in Madeira, and returned to Nantucket with the proceeds in Madeira wine and specie. The voyage was a profitable one, and quite satisfactory to all concerned. The Bonif belonged to Zaccheus Hussey & Sons and Peter Hussey. As soon as this voyage was wound up, Z. Hussey & Sons proposed to me to go to New York, purchase a larger vessel and load her for Madeira. I thought that trade might be followed to advantage, and soon left for New York and purchased the ship Prudence between us, one-half each from Hicks, Jenkins & Co. She was about 243 tons, nearly new, sharp built, carried a small cargo, but sailed very fast. Hicks, Jenkins & Co. loaded her for our account, and I soon sailed for Madeira, where I sold the cargo, and returned to Nantucket in 1st or 2d month, 1812. In a day or two after my arrival the weather became very cold, and the harbor closed with ice, and remained solid until 3d month 4th. As soon as possible I sailed for New York; after arriving there, Hicks, Jenkins & Co. loaded her on owner's account for Lisbon, mostly with flour. Arrived at Lisbon, sold the cargo at a very good price, and brought home the proceeds in Spanish dollars. I also had quite an amount of dollars on freight sufficient to make up $130,000.

I performed the voyage, I think, in seventy-three days. As soon as I delivered the dollars to whom they belonged, and settled my accounts with Hicks, Jenkins & Co., I left in the ship for Nantucket, little thinking that I was to be the bearer of the first news of the declaration of war by the United States against Great Britain, but such was the case. I had no doubt but they would have heard of it in some other way; but the mails traveled slowly in those days. I came to anchor about midnight at the back of the bar, and immediately went on shore in the ship's boat, called on two or three of my friends, and gave them the newspapers that contained the news, which papers were posted the next morning to give the sad news to the people of the island. And sad indeed was it to many of them, as they had a large fleet of whaling ships scattered over the wide ocean, and according to all probability certain destruction awaited many of them. The captains, officers, and many of the crews belonged to the island — therefore the hearts of hundreds — were filled with sorrow and anxiety, as they would have to wait a long time before it could be determined what would be the fate of the absent ships. After breakfast the next morning I walked down to the insurance office, and about the wharves, and it made a deep impression on my mind: almost every person that I met, his countenance was familiar to me, and all seemed glad to shake me by the hand and congratulate me on my safe return home; still the countenances of all showed the care and anxiety that was planted there from the late sad news so lately brought to the island. I felt a deep sympathy for all, knowing or believing that each one must be more or less affected. I felt that I had been wonderfully blessed, that the arm of Divine Goodness had been around me and enabled me to pass through many storms and trials, and brought me back safe to my native land and amongst my earliest friends and acquaintances and to the bosom of my happy family. I remained about twenty-four hours at the back of the bar at anchor with the ship, when we concluded it would be best to go back to New York, go up the North river to Hudson, and lay the ship up in fresh water to prevent worms from boring her, as she was not coppered. The next day took my wife with me, and sailed for New York; sailed up the North river to Athens, and laid the ship up there. The next 11th month, 1812, I took the ship back to Nantucket, took off her spars and rigging, and laid her up until peace was proclaimed in 1815. I remained on the island about one year; I owned a little land, bought a horse and cow, and carried on farming on a small scale sufficient with a small garden to keep my body and mind moderately exercised, which was not unpleasant to me. Being quite out of debt and having sufficient to live on for a few years, and owner of one-half of the ship which was laying at the wharf, which I often took a look at with a hope that the time would not be long before I should be again ploughing the ocean on board of her, and being quietly settled down with my family around me, the twelve months soon passed away. Few, if any, spent a more happy year than I did.

In 10th month, 1813, I was solicited to take charge of the small brig, Boniff, and go to Matomkin, an inlet on the sea-coast on the eastern shore of Virginia: the peninsular is very narrow there from the head of the inlet to Onamock on the Chesapeake bay, I think only about five miles (this is from memory). The plan was to leave the brig there and for me to cross over the Chesapeake bay in a small vessel, and go up the Rappahannock to Fredericksburg, purchase and procure on freight a cargo of flour, about 1,000 barrels, and send it over in very small vessels that would carry one or two hundred barrels. I was disappointed in getting vessels at Onamock; I could only charter one small schooner that would carry one hundred barrels, in which I took passage to Fredericksburg. My funds to purchase the cargo were in Baltimore, Md., and the only way I could get them was to hire a horse, which I did, and rode there on horse-back, procured my money, and rode back to Fredericksburg, purchased some flour, and procured some on freight, in all about 1,000 barrels. I then loaded the little schooner that I came passenger in, with 100 barrels, and sent her off; she arrived safe. I then chartered two more, which took 700 barrels between them; they left and arrived near the inlet on the eastern shore, a little before daylight; they kept very close together for company, and finally got entangled with each other; the wind blowing fresh at the time, they tore their sails, and injured each other so much, that when daylight came, a British cruiser saw them, sent her boats and took possession of them. The balance of the flour, 200 barrels, I shipped by a small schooner, Captain Lewis (who owned her); he was a regular sea captain, a very smart, capable and fearless man. I took passage with him; we went down the Rappahannock, and waited at the mouth of the river for a favorable time to cross the bay. During a dark night, the wind sprang up from the west, and we started; but soon after getting out on the river, the wind left us. When daylight appeared, we saw some British cruisers two or three miles off, and discovered their barges rowing towards us. We saw there was no escape with our schooner, so got out our boat and concluded to leave, and go on shore. When we were about leaving, Captain Lewis determined to remain by his vessel, and try to ransom her. We landed on the shore, and soon after the barges took possession of the vessel and cargo, and went off with Captain Lewis, solitary and alone; but as I expected, he had the sympathy of his captors and they treated him kindly. A lady, with her son and daughter, saw the whole affair, and were on the beach when we landed, invited us to her house, and treated us with the greatest kindness. I remained there for a number of days, not knowing how I should get to the other side of the Chesapeake bay and join the brig, when one day a small half-decked oyster boat came and anchored not far from where we landed, and Captain Lewis soon made his appearance. Thee can judge how glad we were to meet again, as I felt almost like a prisoner, as I knew not how to get to my vessel, as there was no conveyance by land or water that I could get, and as Captain Lewis returned, as he left solitary and alone, our meeting was very pleasant. Well, they made a prize of the schooner and cargo, and a prisoner of Captain Lewis: he said they treated him like a gentleman on board the man-of-war; but would not ransom his vessel. After a few days they made him a present of this oyster boat, paroled him, gave him provisions, and allowed him to start off alone as they found him, and steer back for the Rappahannock. We waited for a dark night and fair wind to cross the Chesapeake, which soon came. We had no compass, but Captain Lewis had a hunting watch with a magnetic needle on the face showing the north and south points, by which we found our way over. My disappointment was great when I learned the fate of my flour (as I have related before); however, there was still a bright spot; after it was known that it was practicable to send flour to the eastern shore of Virginia, and cart it over to Matomkin inlet; others had started from Richmond, and sent over several hundred barrels. I soon engaged a full freight at high rates and sailed for Nantucket, where I arrived safely, and to the great joy of the inhabitants, I have no doubt, as all were glad to hear of provision being landed there, as it was sometimes scarce and very dear.

I now settled down quiet on the island, and in the spring of 1814, I commenced my farming operations again on a rather larger scale. I found it not very profitable, but I was very much interested in it, and it was necessary that I should have something to do; I could not be idle. This year we were very much annoyed with small privateers in the Vineyard sound, capturing our small coasting vessels which made it very difficult to get flour, corn and the various necessaries of life from the continent. Prices were very high, and scarcely any business doing. The available property on the island was almost entirely in sperm and whale oil, and sperm candles, but that was of no use to them on the island if they could not by any means get it to Boston, New York or Philadelphia, where it was very much wanted, and exchange it for provisions. It seemed almost like starving in the midst of plenty. Nantucket was almost like a neutral port, as there were no military laws in force; there was not a cannon or a musket on the island for war purposes; such a thing as fighting to defend themselves was not thought of; they felt that they were at the mercy of the enemy, knowing that one small vessel well armed and manned might come into the harbor and destroy the town. The difficulty of getting sufficient provisions upon the island, to feel certain of having enough to last 7,000 or 8,000 people through the coming winter, was a source of great uneasiness with many. It was concluded to call a town meeting, and appoint a committee to go to Washington and represent to the heads of the government the very unhappy situation the inhabitants were in, and the likelihood of their being distressed for the want of provisions. The committee were treated with kindness, and told that government could do nothing for them officially; but told them, or perhaps gave them liberty, to go on board Admiral Hotham's ship of war (then laying off Stonington harbor), with a flag of truce as a committee from the town of Nantucket, and ask the admiral for permission from him to allow three coasting vessels, one for Philadelphia, one for New York, and one for Boston, to take on board oil and candles, and go to those ports solely to buy provisions for the inhabitants of the island. The committee were received kindly by Admiral Hotham; he granted their request, and gave written passes for three vessels, and directing all the English war vessels to allow them to pass unmolested. Our government could not legalize it, though fully understanding it. It was necessary, therefore, to show the passes to English cruisers only: had our war vessels discovered such a pass they would have made a prize at once. It gave great relief, and the privilege I believe was not abused in the least degree. I think it was very kind in the admiral, as nothing was asked or given for the privilege. I was offered the command of one of the vessels to run to Philadelphia, which I accepted, and took charge of the schooner Ruby, about 75 tons. I now gave up my farming operations, sold my horse and all my farming utensils, well satisfied with the benefits I had received, both in body and mind. The schooner was loaded with oil and sperm candles, and I sailed for Philadelphia in 10th month, 1814, and returned with a load of provisions; loaded and sailed again 1st month 5th, 1815; had much difficulty in getting up to Philadelphia on account of the ice, and after arriving there was frozen up solid for two months. While at Philadelphia peace took place. While making the two trips I was boarded a number of times by British men-of-war, always treated politely, and the admiral's pass fully respected.

As soon as the Ruby was discharged at Nantucket, we commenced fitting and rigging the ship Prudence, and in four months I sailed for New York, where she was sold for about the same price that we paid for her. I then went over to Hanover in Boston bay, for the purpose of buying a new ship. I looked at the ship Edward, 346 tons, new and nearly rigged; the builders said they intended sending her to New York, consigned to Hicks, Jenkins & Co. for sale. In 7th mo., 1815, I purchased one-half of the Edward from them, they holding the other half. Business was very dull, and the ship lay idle for some time, but in 11th month I loaded and sailed for Liverpool, and continued following the Liverpool trade steadily until 1818. In 2d month, 1818, I sailed for Calcutta under a charter to stop at Madras, going and returning, and return to Philadelphia, and discharge the principal part of her cargo. I arrived in Calcutta 6th month, 1818, the next year after the Asiatic cholera raged so badly in the East Indies, and was then so fatal there. Two of my seamen were attacked with it, one died in 12 @ 15 hours, the other recovered. This was the first knowledge I ever had of Asiatic cholera; it traveled north from there to St. Petersburg in Russia, thence to England, then to Canada, and then to New York in 1832. It was fourteen years in traveling that circuit. The first case that I recollect in this country was in Cherry street, New York, I remained in the city during the time that it prevailed there: I believe I never missed a day during the entire season, but that I went to my place of business. I felt that in attending to my business I was in the line of my duty, and I think that has much to do with our feelings; when we feel that we are moving along in the right path we fear not. I enjoyed good health, as well as my family who remained home with me. I was detained in Calcutta almost five months, nearly one of which was on demurrage. I arrived in Philadelphia, in 3d month, 1819, and discharged the bulk of my cargo; I collected the freight, and remitted it to New York. Being well acquainted in Philadelphia I did not need the assistance of any commission house, but transacted all the business of the ship myself; then went to New York, and discharged the balance of the cargo. After remaining there some time, took in a cargo for Cadiz, considerable part being on owner's account, which I sold at a fair profit and returned to New York with a cargo of salt. Remained in New York but a short time, when I loaded again for Cadiz, in the spring of 1820; the cargo as before being mostly on owner's account, which I sold at a good profit, except 240 barrels of pork, which I could not sell except at considerable loss. I therefore concluded to keep that on board and stop at Madeira, which I did, and sold it to John Howard March & Co. at a very good price and with very little detention. Richard Mead and his son Richard were passengers with me this voyage from Cadiz. Richard Mead was U. S. consul, and a merchant of very high standing in Cadiz. I think I was at Madeira, in 7th month, 1820.

During my absence on the voyage to the East Indies, my very dear friend and thy grandfather Silvanus F. Jenkins, and one of the principal partners of Hicks, Jenkins & Co., passed away from this transitory world to another and a happier state I have no doubt. This loss was very great to all who knew him; it was a very severe trial to me, as I did not hear that he was gone until I returned to Philadelphia. We had been intimately acquainted from early life, and had been transacting business together for several years, and a strong attachment existed between us; we felt like brothers. The firm was dissolved, and the business was continued by Samuel Hicks. Soon after this voyage was wound up we concluded to build a new ship, and contracted with Brown & Bell to build one of about 400 tons. This was the first ship they built after they commenced business, and was one of the strongest and best built ships of that day. She was launched in 3d month, 1821, fitted and rigged immediately, and was called the Orbit. Her first voyage was to Liverpool and back to New York, and was a very profitable one. I continued in charge of the Orbit, running steadily in the Liverpool trade until the summer of 1823, when we sold her. Samuel Hicks and myself then bought a new ship on the stocks, being built by Noah Brown. She was launched in 7th month, 1823, and called the Diamond. She was 501 tons, and I sailed in her for Liverpool, in 8th month, 1823, and continued in command of her in the Liverpool trade for over one year. In 1824 we purchased another ship on the stocks being built by James Morgan, about 500 tons. She was launched in 11th month, 1824, and called the Isaac Hicks. I took charge of her, and sailed for Charleston, S. C., and loaded there for Liverpool. My brother Henry took charge of the ship Diamond, and sailed from New York for Liverpool late in 1824. The ship and most of the crew with himself were lost in Cardigan bay. It was a very sad and melancholy loss; he was a young man, and this the first ship that he had commanded. One-half of the ship belonged to Samuel Hicks and the other half to myself; she was insured for about what she cost, but no insurance on her freight, therefore the loss of property was considerable. I ran the Isaac Hicks about one year in the Liverpool trade. James Morgan then had another new ship on the stocks, about 550 tons, which we purchased, that is Samuel Hicks & Sons and myself. She was launched in the autumn of 1825, and was named after thy grandfather, Silvanus Jenkins. I took command of her, and sailed for Charleston, S. C., in 11th month, 1825, and loaded with cotton for Liverpool. She was considered quite a large ship in that day, and I noticed one of the papers mentioned that the ship Silvanus Jenkins had cleared for Liverpool with 1,800 bales of cotton, being the largest cargo ever taken away from Charleston, in an American ship. I continued in charge of the S. Jenkins steadily in the Liverpool trade until 11th month, 1827. Before leaving New York on the last voyage, I concluded not to follow the sea any more. During my stay in Liverpool I made some arrangements about commencing business in New York on my return. The ship was now running as one of the line of Liverpool packets. I had a very good freight home, and as many passengers in the cabin as I could accommodate, among them was Albert Gallatin, his wife and family (the American minister to Great Britain), Joshua Bates one of the house of Baring Bros. & Co., of London, with his family, ..... Gear, a branch of Baring Bros. & Co.'s house in Liverpool, and many others. I merely mention a few names to show that the Silvanus Jenkins was considered a good safe ship to cross the ocean in; the passage was one of the most boisterous ones that I ever made; but we were favored to arrive safe without any serious accident. I now felt that the right time had come for me to quit the sea; I felt that scarcely anything would induce me to undertake another voyage. The ship was discharged, and the voyage wound up, when I sold my half of her and prepared to start in a new business. I was then between forty-two and forty-three years of age; I had been upwards of twenty-two years in command of various ships and other vessels. I never lost a vessel that I had command of, nor did I ever meet with any serious shipwreck.

My heart was filled with thankfulness to my Heavenly Father, by whose divine assistance I had been guided safely through many storms and dangers while traversing the mighty ocean, and wonderfully preserved when breathing the pestilential air of a foreign climate; I felt blessings had been showered down upon me without number.

On the first of the year 1828, I commenced the shipping and commission business in the city of New York, under the firm of Josiah Macy & Son; my son William H. having joined me as a partner. After my son Charles became of age he was admitted as a partner, and the firm was changed to Josiah Macy & Sons. My other three sons were admitted as they became of age; the firm remaining the same for about twenty-five years. In 1853, I retired from business in New York, feeling that I had as much property as was necessary for my comfort and happiness, leaving the business in a sound and prosperous condition with my sons and some of my grandsons, who have continued along prosperously under the firm of Josiah Macy's Sons. In 1853, I purchased a farm near the town of Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y., a pleasant situation overlooking Long Island sound, and when evening comes I have the cheerful view of the lights from five light-houses which are placed there to guide the mariner on his way. No one can scarcely know the pleasure of the sight of one of these, except the anxious sailor who watches steadily, and finally discovers the light in time to guide his ship through a dark, tempestuous night into a safe and quiet harbor, where he can cast anchor and remain fearless of all storms. Since I left business in New York I have passed most of my time on my farm: the quiet rural retirement has been very congenial to my feelings; it is what I often thought of in years that are gone. I feel that it is a great blessing that I have been permitted to enjoy it so long. With ardent desires for thy present and future happiness,

I remain thy affectionate grandfather,

JOSIAH MACY.

HENRY, b. at Hudson, July 30, 1825; d. at New York, Feb. 23, 1858 578

Caroline Macy was daughter of Benjamin Macy and Lydia Bunker, born at Hudson, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1804; married at Hudson, N. Y., died at New York, Dec. 7, 1825.

Henry Macy (215), commanded the ship Diamond in 1824. Sailed from New York in December of that year for Liverpool, England. In January, 1825, they neared the coast of England, and made the land, as they supposed, off Holyhead, the wind blowing a gale at the time from the northward, weather thick and stormy. After standing to the eastward far enough to clear what they thought was Holyhead, kept the ship off for Liverpool. But when too late they discovered they had mistaken Bardsey island, or the land about this headland, for Holyhead, and had been running into Cardigan bay, where the ship was lost with all on board, except Alexander Russel, second officer, and six of the crew.

John B. Macy removed to New York city in January, 1826, and from thence to Buffalo, N. Y., the same year. From thence to Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1842, where he resided until 1845, when he removed to Fond du Lac, Wis., where he resided until his death. He was a representative in congress from Wisconsin, from 1853 to 1855, and was lost by the burning of the steamer Niagara on Lake Michigan, Sept. 24, 1857.

From the Nantucket Inquirer of October 2, 1857.

Hon. John B. Macy.—By the recent destruction of the steamer Niagara this gentlemen is without doubt lost. There is not probably a man that could have been taken away in the United States, who had so great a personal acquaintance with the people of this country as Mr. Macy, and no one whose loss will be more lamented. Born of one of the first families of Nantucket, at a very early age he commenced mercantile pursuits, in which he showed the remarkable energy and perseverance which, with ordinary fortune, would have retained him in the place of his nativity, and been the means of extending the business of the people to an extent beyond that of any other whaling community. His first business proved disastrous, and at the early age of 26, after having been a leading merchant and man for years, he was compelled to resign his business here and go to New York.

After some few years he became one of the forwarding house of Smith & Macy, in Buffalo, and afterward an extensive purchaser of lands in that section of the country. The city of Toledo, and other cities of the West, were purchased a wilderness, and commenced by his energy and perseverance alone. After amassing a princely fortune, the decline of the Western land speculation, in which he was deeply interested, reduced his means considerably, but not so but what he could make another trial; and with the residue, he commenced the purchase of lands in Wisconsin, and began founding other towns, which have since grown up into thriving cities. His estates have become increased, and he leaves a large and finely invested property in Fond du Lac, one of the principal places in that growing state, from which he was chosen a member of congress a few years since.

His great robust frame, his tall, gentlemanly appearance, his courteous affability, his fine eye and intelligent face, his benevolent expression and over generous heart, made him warm friends wherever he went, and gave him great influence with all he happened to meet. His learning, which was varied and good, his great share of common sense, his laudable ambition and commanding address, connected him closely with the leading men of the country, so that hardly a president, a secretary, a senator or a congressman of the country did not reckon "Macy" among his friends when he made his dinner party or levee. Equally liked by the politicians of all shades, traveling through every part of the Union continually, remembering everybody he had ever met before, and having a joke and a kind word for each,

he made all his personal friends, and repaid them by endeavoring to further their interests at any expense of labor to himself. The feeling of envy never entered his heart, Selfishness was a perfect stranger to him. He liket to be prosperous himself, but was anxious for everybody else to be so too.

If any reader of this slight notice remembers visiting him at Buffalo years ago or at Fond du Lac more recently, they will remember what an extensive and open house he kept, where everybody was made so welcome that it became a home in a single day. Visitors by the score came to it, as to a hotel, to renew their friendship, and were always so kindly received. Those who spoke well of him and those who spoke ill — an envious few — all partook of his bounty, and had it proffered with the same good will.

Just in the meridian of manhood he has been taken away, and Nantucket, as well as Wisconsin, has lost a son she may well be proud of. We sympathize with his afflicted family, and wish it could have been so ordered that he might have remained for many years.

For some years during a flourishing period of the whaling business at Nantucket, there might be daily seen, morning and evening, in the busiest thoroughfare, two seemingly inseparable merchants on their way from and to their neighboring homes. These were Thomas and Peter Macy, the first and the third son of Obed Macy, the historian of the island. This mark of fraternal attachment was an hereditary characteristic. They were literally stepping in the tracks of their father and uncle, alike inseparable.

In common with other members of the family, Thomas was nurtured in the strictest line of Quakerism, and though the society, at this period, was foremost in the education of their children, the standard of literary instruction was low, except in those departments directly applicable to the business of the place. In Thomas Macy's experience, much valuable time was lost by the persistent employment of a teacher whose disposition was illy adapted to the tenderness of his youth, and it was only after he had reached manhood that he gave attention to English grammar. According to the habits of that period of giving to boys a knowledge of some mechanical branch connected with the whaling navigation, Thomas learned that of a blacksmith, which business, in connection with a brass foundry, he carried on till interrupted by the war of 1812. A few years after peace, he was appointed postmaster by President Munroe. The duties of this office, he faithfully performed for eleven years, and his marked official urbanity is proverbial at the present day. An early victim to the policy inaugurated by President Jackson, he engaged in the importation and manufacture of sperm oil, till within a year of his death. He was active in the current politics of his time, and had a decided taste for public speaking, a gift which he chiefly exercised in the promotion of the interest of others, having himself little or no desire for office. He was very happy as a presiding officer, in which service he was much employed by the town meetings and other local assemblies. He was through life religiously inclined, and an active, exemplary member of the society of Friends. He was three times married, and survived the last wife for some years.

He was happy in his family, and at a ripe age passed away suddenly, having retired in usual health, except an infirmity of no alarm: life in the course of the night had become extinct, leaving, however, an expression of great composure, strikingly indicating that no struggle accompanied the change.

Ann Swain was daughter of Gilbert Swain and Margaret Barnard, born at Nantucket, May 2, 1798; married at Nantucket, March 31, 1817; died at Nantucket, Sept. 18, 1827.

Elizabeth Gardner was daughter of Jared Gardner and Eunice Coffin, born at Nantucket, April 19, 1802; married at Nantucket, Nov. 6, 1828; resides at Nantucket.

Peter Macy inherited in a remarkable degree, not only the firm integrity of his father, the historian of the island, but the proverbial amiableness of his mother. His education, though somewhat better than the average of that day, was limited to the English branches, and such knowledge of mathematics as the business of the island required. According to the habit and manifest interest of the community, of giving to the young men a practical knowledge of some mechanical art, Peter learned the cooper's trade, and after the termination of the war of 1812 he pursued it till it was too evident, that his constitution was not equal to a calling of so severe a character. He subsequently became a teacher, and at one time an auctioneer, and finally connected himself with his brother Thomas in the whaling business, in which he was in a fair degree successful; but the seeds of a fatal disease had early taken root, and gradually destroyed his energies, and, after a painful period, terminated a life marked with every excellence.

With but little desire for notoriety, his good sense and well balanced mind often subjected him to the public demands, and his services were always highly appreciated.

He was twice married, and his last wife has long survived him with an amiable family. He was universally esteemed through life, and equally lamented in death. Those who knew him best loved him most. By birth he was a member of the Society of Friends, and he never departed from the profession, of which he was at all times an ornament.

Alice Swain was daughter of Hezekiah Swain and Lydia Fish, born at Nantucket, April 17, 1802; married at Nantucket, Aug. 18, 1825; resides at Nantucket.

Daniel P. Macy (475), received a liberal school education, being naturally quick to learn, and very studious. Upon leaving school, he learned the cooper's trade with his brother Peter; but he soon found it was injurious to his health, his constitution being too slight to withstand such hard manual labor. He then tried the coasting trade between Nantucket and Providence, R. I., which he followed for two years. Finding this course of life not agreeable to his taste, he abandoned it and settled in Hartford, Conn., in 1827, as a commission merchant, where he resided until 1832, when he removed to Philadelphia. His health commenced to fail, and in 1837 his friends manifested much uneasiness at the alarming symptoms of his cough and general indisposition, that he abandoned business, and in the fall set sail for New Orleans, to endeavor to recuperate his failing strength; but consumption soon carried him to his grave.

He is a man of energy and perseverance; he has laid aside the sword, and taken up the pen in the auditor's office at Winchester, Ind., where he is industriously applying himself to thoroughly understand mercantile pursuits; his aim — to be a merchant. He is one of the few that have rendered signal service in obtaining information for this work, for which the writer is greatly indebted. Much of the information in regard to many of the Indiana branches of the family has been obtained through his exertions.

William H. Macy (568), removed from Nantucket to New York, in March, 1823. In the following month he entered the counting room of Samuel Hicks, 154 South street, where he remained until he became of age. He then commenced business on his own account as a commission merchant, and took an office at 228 Front street. On the 1st of January, 1828, his father joined him under the firm of Josiah Macy & Son. In 1834, he was elected a member of the chamber of commerce, and some years later was elected vice president of that body. In 1845, he was elected director of the Leather Manufacturers Bank, and on the 5th of March, 1855, he was elected president of the bank, which position he still holds. The original charter of the bank expired on the 1st of June, 1862, and on the 30th of December, 1862, the directors of the bank invited him to dine with them at Delmonico's. They extended their invitation to four or five others not members of the board, amongst that number was the writer. After doing full justice to a very elegant repast, a suberb silver vase was placed at the head of the table and presented to him by his codirectors as a token of their esteem and friendship. A handsome testimonial on parchment signed by the directors accompanied it. On the 12th of January, 1848, he was elected a trustee of the Seaman's Bank for Savings. In 1851, he was elected vice president, and on the 3d of June, 1863, was elected president of that institution, which position he resigned September 5, 1867, deeming it advisable, in conjunction with the other directors, to have a president who would devote his entire time to the bank and be compensated for it, more particularly as the business of the bank had become so large — the deposit account amounting to over nine millions of dollars. From the organization of the bank in 1829, up to this time, the president, secretary and trustees had never received any pecuniary compensation for their services, the only compensation being the mental satisfaction of aiding and assisting the poor to save and deposit their hard earnings where they would be not only secure but where they could receive a fair interest on their money. Upon accepting his resignation the board of trustees passed resolutions which were handsomely engrossed on parchment and presented to him. He holds the position of vice president of the United States Trust Co., and is connected with the management of several insurance and rail road corporations. He has been executor of many estates, selected by his friends for his known high sense of honor, integrity and business capacity. Photo-lithographs of the testimonials from the Leather Manufacturers Bank, and Seamans Bank for Savings are annexed, and his family prize them, for they are expressions not of etiquette, but of feelings of high esteem and appreciation from his friends in the commercial world. In the domestic circle we could say more — much more than his business acquaintances — but for obvious reasons the writer must leave the social or domestic part of his biography for others; suffice it to say that he has bound his children to him by all the ties of parent and friend.

The Seamen's Bank for Savings in the City of New York

At a Meeting of the Board of Trustees, held at the Banking House, on Thursday, October 10th 1867, the following Report was read, unanimously adopted, ordered to be recorded on the Book of Minutes, handsomely engrossed and presented to Mr. Macy.

William Nelson Secretary.

The Committee appointed at the last Meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Seamen's Bank for Savings to prepare suitable Resolutions upon the retirement of W. H. Macy, Esq.r from the Presidency of the Board, to respectfully beg leave to make the following

Report:

It appears from the Records that Mr. Macy became a Trustee of this Bank in 1848, in 1851 he was elected Vice President, and in June, 1863 succeeded the late lamented Philetus Swift, Esq.r as President.

During his service in these different positions, Mr. Macy distinguished himself by a faithful, unfailing discharge of the various duties imposed upon him winning for himself by his unform urbanity of manner and zealous guardianship of the interests of the Bank the warmest respect and confidence of every member of the Board.

His acceptance of the Presidency when already severely taxed with the duties and cares of other posts of honor and trust, and at a period in the History of our Country, when perhaps more than ever before or since, the prosperity of the Bank hinged upon a prudent, diligent and sagacious executive head, was evidence of the deep interest he felt in the welfare of the Institution, and the most fitting tribute which can be offered to his faithful, unflagging zeal and skill, with which he managed its affairs during his Presidency, is to reference to the highly prosperous condition of the Bank and the safety of its investments on his retirement from office.

His uniform courtesy and kindness of manner which Mr. Macy combined with his prompt, intelligent business habits and punctual performance of all his duties, secured to him the personal esteem of every member of the Board, and inspired each of them with entire confidence in his able, upright management of the affairs of the Bank.

Be it therefore –

RESOLVED, That the Board of Trustees of the Seamen's Bank for Savings, whilst sincerely regretting the retirement of W. H. Macy, Esq.r from the Presidency nevertheless recognize the reasonableness of the motives which endrove him to this action.

RESOLVED, That the Board, in accepting Mr. Macy's resignation as President, cannot permit him to retire from the position he has so faithfully and ably filled, without expressing their high appreciation of him as a Christian gentleman & at the same time tendering to him their cordial & kind wishes and sincere thanks for the gratuitous and intelligent services rendered by him to the Bank.

RESOLVED, That Mr. Macy be requested to sit for his Portrait, in the use of the Trustees, to any Artist he may prefer, and that a Committee of three be appointed to confer with him and carry out this Resolution.

RESOLVED, That the Secretary transmit a copy of this Report and Resolutions to Mr. Macy and while the members of the Board of Trustees bid him an affectionate farewell as their President they express the hope that he will long continue to remain with them and enjoy their confidence.

All of which is Respectfully Submitted.

Charles A. Macy was born on the island of Nantucket, where he remained at school until he was about fourteen years of age, with the exception of a short time at Providence boarding school, when he commenced learning the trade of block and pump making, at which he worked about sixteen months. He removed from the island with his parents to New York in the spring of 1823. In less than a week after his arrival in New York, he commenced as a clerk in the counting house of Isaac Wright & Son, who were largely engaged in the shipping business, being part owners and agents for the Old Line of Liverpool Packets consisting of eight ships; besides which they owned two other ships engaged in transient service. He continued with them until January 1, 1831, when he became a partner with his father, and brother, William H., who were in the shipping and general commission business. He commenced housekeeping in the spring of that year on Hicks street, Brooklyn, which was at that time a mere village, containing only about 16,000 inhabitants. He lived there about two years, when he removed to Henry street, New York. In January, he left the firm of Josiah Macy & Sons, and became a member of the firm of Corlies, Haydock & Co., in the auction and commission business, the senior member of said firm, Benjamin Corlies, being his father-in-law. In 1844, he removed with his family to Newburgh, on the west bank of the Hudson river, but continued in active business in the city; after residing there about three years he removed to New York, and hired a place of about seven acres corner of 58th street and 8th avenue, occupying it one year whilst building a house on 21st street, between Broadway and 4th avenue, into which he moved in the spring of 1848. He resided there three years when he removed to Poughkeepsie, where he had purchased about thirty-five acres of land and erected a very superior and substantial mansion. This was the second time that he removed from the city for the benefit of his wife whose health was exceedingly delicate. In January, 1851, he retired from the firm of Corlies, Haydock & Co., and formed a new copartnership for the sale of foreign and domestic dry goods, on commission, under the firm of Macy, Stanton & Co., in which he remained only a few years when he quit merchandizing.

In the spring of 1855, in company with a few others, he organized the New York County Bank of New York, with a capital of $200,000, of which he took the presidency, and retained the same until the early part of the year 1856, when the Park Bank was organized with a capital of $2,000,000. Being invited to take the cashiership of that institution, he did so with Reuben W. Howes as president, in which capacity they both acted until the summer of 1863, when they resigned and commenced the banking business on their own account, under the firm of Howes & Macy at No. 30 Wall street. In the summer of 1857, he disposed of his place at Poughkeepsie and removed once more to New York. He is a man with whom it is always pleasant to be associated. He is noted by all who know him for his uprightness, liberality and urbanity. He has held many positions of honor and trust. In 1832, when but twenty-four years of age, he was executor to the estate of his friend, Archibald Campbell, which amounted to about $60,000. In 1856, his old friend, Jasper Grosvenor, a well known citizen of New York, died, leaving him one of his executors to his estate, which amounted to over one million of dollars. He has held many minor executorships and positions of trust.

Josiah Henry Macy (577), upon leaving school, turned his attention to farming, and took charge of a farm at Rye, N. Y., belonging to his grandfather, Josiah Macy. Having received a fine education, and being a young man of energy and ability, he minutely examined all the various appliances and improvements in agricultural implements; and adopted such, as, according to his judgment, were most useful and best adapted to his work. It is now considered one of the model farms of Westchester county. He has been frequently called upon to act on the agricultural committee of the American Institute. He was elected a justice of the peace of the town of Harrison, Westchester Co., N. Y., for the term of four years from the first of January, 1866.

In response to a letter asking for any incidents in his life, Robert C. Macy (579), writes as follows, under date of April 26, 1867: "I will cheerfully give you any information tending to forward so praiseworthy an object as rescuing the Macy family from oblivion, and adding to our national literature. My own life presents so few startling events, I shall be satisfied with a small space. To be brief, born at Nantucket, etc., emigrated to Mobile, October, 1838, married; etc. Have made Mobile my home, with the exception of six weeks' residence on Ship island, to which place I was escorted in 1865 by a delegation of my countrymen, after relieving me, without leave, of my watch, clothing and money. Had board free of expense to myself, and not much to anybody else."

WHAT IS MAN?

Tossed with sorrow, grief and trouble,
On life's ocean, dark and drear;
Is man but an empty bubble,
Soon to burst and disappear?

Is he but a transient flower,
Opened by the breath of May —
Blooming, smiling for an hour,
Destined soon to pass away?

Is he but ordained to flourish,
In this world of care and grief —
Doomed to fade and fall and perish,
Like the withered Autumn leaf?

No, though like the leaf that's driven,
By the rude Autumnal blast;
Though the waves of dark oblivion,
Soon shall close above his breast.

Yet we have assurance given,
That the righteous have a home;
Where, eternally in Heaven,
Man forever more shall bloom.

(HENRY,[6] HENRY,[5] JOSEPH,[4] THOMAS,[3] JOHN,[2] THOMAS[1]).

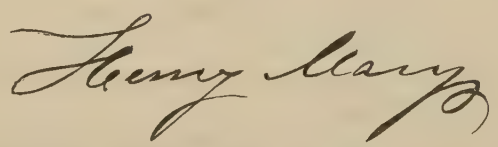
No children.

Mary A. Cox was daughter of Enoch Cox and Mary Cox, born at Randolph Co., N. C., Oct. 29, 1825; married at Providence, N. C., Oct. 2, 1850; resides at Centre, N. C.



Henry Macy has passed his life thus far upon a farm, devoting most of his time to farming. In his youth he had advantage only of what was termed a "field school," where they taught spelling, reading, writing, and Pike's arithmetic. After he became old enough he occasionally assisted his father and brother at cabinet-making. Soon after his marriage, in 1850, he settled upon his father's farm and remained one year, when he purchased the farm upon which he at present resides. Being a member of the Society of Friends, and conscientious about bearing arms, he suffered much during the rebellion. The state government of North Carolina exempted Friends from entering the army upon payment of certain taxes. He was once imprisoned for not volunteering, but was soon released. Besides these annoyances, he suffered much pecuniary loss.

Maria Pinkham was daughter of Peter Pinkham and Desire Clark, born at Nantucket, June 26, 1793; married at Nantucket, July 3, 1817; resides at Nantucket.

Alexander Macy (939), at the age of sixteen, commenced going to sea, sailing from his birthplace Nantucket. During the war of 1812, he sailed in the letter of marque Spartan, commanded by Captain Gardner of Nantucket, where most of the crew belonged. In 1814, he was offered the position of chief mate of a vessel, so he left the letter of marque to assume his new duties. But he was not permitted to enjoy his new position long, for they had hardly cleared the coast before they were taken by a British man-of-war. After his release he remained on shore until peace was proclaimed, when he made a voyage in the ship Tarquin, after which was chief mate of the ship General Lincoln, when she was lost in the terrible gale of September, 1818, which hurled destruction in its course to so many noble ships, and buried so many poor fellows in the mighty deep He was taken off the ship, and landed in the city of New York, the latter part of October. In December, he took charge of the ship Columbus of Boston, and in January, 1819, sailed for Havre, where he put her under French colors, and fitted her for a whaling voyage, which proved very successful. On his return to Havre, he laid the ship up and returned to Boston; soon after which he took charge of the ship Palladium, belonging to the same owner, and in 1821, sailed for the Pacific ocean, on a sperm whale voyage. From 1825 to 1834, he made several successful voyages to the Pacific, and retired from the sea in the latter year, having followed the sea twenty-eight years. Was president of the Nantucket Savings Bank for several years, but resigned in 1861, it being too much care for him. He has always been considered a very able and exemplary ship master and citizen.

Mehitable K. Potter was daughter of Restcom Potter and Deborah Doubleday, born at Newport, R. I., April 20, 1809; married at Newport, R. I., June 5, 1831; resides at Newport, R. I.

Seth W. Macy (943), was born on the island of Nantucket, and when eighteen years of age he concluded to follow in the footsteps of many of his predecessors, and pursue a seafaring life. At the age of twenty-three he commanded a ship, and continued in that business twenty-seven years, retiring at the age of forty-four. Whilst commanding ships he visited many parts of Europe, South America, and the West Indies, was in one of the first American ships that passed through the great canal from New Deep to the city of Amsterdam. He was at Buenos Ayres when war was declared between that place and Monte Video, for the supremacy of the Rio de la Plata, was detained there several months, being both blockaded and embargoed, and witnessed the first naval battle fought by them. In the year 1850, he was elected to the state senate of Rhode island, having made Newport his home since 1831. In 1852, he resigned and accepted a seat in the town council. In 1854, the town having become a city, he was elected a member of the board of aldermen. In 1856, he was again elected a member of the legislature without much opposition, but resigned the following year, having become somewhat tired of public life. In 1861, he was induced to accept the position of collector of the port of Newport, which he still retains. He is a gentleman of a very high sense of honor and integrity, and noted during his business career of being scrupulously honest. The author distinctly remembers, and records it with much gratification, when a clerk in New York, he frequently heard it remarked, that it was always well to purchase cargoes of crude sperm oil from Seth W. Macy upon his own representations as to quality, as it would always turn out in favor of the purchaser; he was so fearful of representing it too good that he would generally undervalue it.

(SETH,[6] ABRAHAM,[5] ABRAHAM,[4] RICHARD,[3] JOHN,[2] THOMAS[1]).

CHILDREN, EIGHTH GENERATION.

ELIHU, JR., b. at Henrietta, Ohio, July 20, 1864; d. at Henrietta, Ohio, young. 1808

Mary E. Palmer was daughter of John E. Palmer and Elizabeth Ward, born at Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 24, 1827; married at Mansfield, Ohio, Oct. 4, 1851; resides at Henrietta, Ohio.

Elihu Macy (977), having the misfortune to lose his parents when quite young, his early training was left to relatives. He has furnished a very graphic sketch of his life, but writes that he would rather have made no mention of himself, having little ambition for the praise of men, it suffices him to know that his "record is on high." "But as he anticipates much pleasure in the work for which this is intended, and knowing that the interest of that work depends in a measure upon such contributions, he refuses not to add his mite." I purpose giving his own language, commencing when he launched out into the world, as his record shows, without a compass.

"At the age of eighteen I had never known the want of a home, but I had very much needed some one to develop my better nature — some one to love and advise me. But wanting this, what could have been expected, but that the evils of my nature should take deep root, and grow rampant. At this age I was deprived of a home. I shall never forget the first day I wandered friendless and homeless in the world. I was poorly prepared for it. I knew but little of the ways of the world, and was precipitated upon it without knowing where I should find my first day's employment, or my first night's lodging. How this was brought about cannot well be told without being more personal than I wish to be at present. But I can say that I have never been able to see the justice of it, or to blame myself for it. As I wandered, not knowing or caring where I went, I wished in my heart that I might lie down and die. My brothers were scattered and strangers to me, and my other kindred more distant still than strangers. I realized then, as never before that I was an orphan, and friendless. I was not long in finding employment, and at pretty good wages, which revived my spirits, and begat a little feeling of independence; and I resolved not to be disheartened by any surmountable difficulty. I was thrown into almost all kinds of associations but good, and I shall not be judged more depraved than the commonality of men, if I say that my moral movement was a retrograde. For two years my downward course was rapid. I not only contracted pernicious habits, but imbibed more pernicious sentiments. And why shouldn't I? Without the restraints of religious, or even moral associations, to check my downward course, and without the constraints of love to lift me up, or raise me higher, what could have been expected, but moral sinking? It is easy, says one, 'to be good where there is no temptation to evil.' But it is much easier to be bad where there is no incentive to virtue. But I did not continue this course long. He who ordered all my steps, had prepared a school for my soul, where I was to be taught the rudiments of a higher life. Up to this time, I had scarcely known a sick day in my life. I had not thought that such a thing was likely to occur with me, or that any such contingency needed to be provided for. I lived careless of the future, only providing for present wants and pleasures. But a new experience was before me. In the spring of 1842, and the twenty-first year of my age, I was taken suddenly, and severely sick. For a time the probabilities of life and of death seemed to balance each other. With one stroke, my physical, and soul strength was taken away. My fortifications were worthless, and I saw my soul exposed to the sword of retributive justice. I was wretched indeed: homeless, helpless, and friendless. O, that word! It lay like an incubus on my soul. I felt sure I had no friend on earth, and thought I had none above. I was then dependent upon the charities of what I had many times pronounced a heartless world. It was a severe school; but I needed it. I was provided for. My own parents, if they had been living, could have done no more for me. And this kindness was from those who were under no obligations to me, more than those imposed by common Christianity; for my benefactors were Christian people — a class against which I had been severe. I saw my wrong, and I heartily repented. I thought better of Christians, and of the world; better of Him who made and governs all things; and more diminutively of myself. The disease took a favorable turn, and I recovered, a more thoughtful, and I believe, a better boy. From that time I had an object in life above selfish gratification. I wished no longer to be a curse to the world, but that the world might be made better for my having lived in it. I began to inquire after the true principles of life and happiness. I tried to divest myself of all prejudice, and inquire only at the oracles of God. I believed that the scriptures were given by inspiration of God, and were profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness, and I wanted to be governed by them alone, and without reserve. I did not consult my own choice of doctrines, nor the opinions of men. I found it difficult, for a long time, to make my religious views harmonize with any religious sect that I knew. And I never yet have found any with which I could perfectly agree. My parents, and all of my connections, so far as I knew, were, in sentiments, followers of Elias Hicks; consequently, my prepossessions were in their favor. Yet I could not adopt their tenets altogether, though I loved their simple form of worship, their plain address, and plain attire; their sterling morality, and not less, their unqualified opposition to human oppression. This was a principle that seemed hereditary with me. I acknowledge it prepossessed my mind. But my religious researches did not weaken it. So strongly did I abhor ease or affluence acquired at the expense of another, that it was a principle with me from a boy, not to allow another to wait upon me when I could wait upon myself. It was my choice to serve rather than be served. After my sickness and recovery, my sole object was to be useful to the world. I felt an irresistible conviction that I was to preach the gospel. But I was poor and uneducated, and I felt that there was much to be done before I could be a successful or acceptable preacher. The conviction that I was called to preach was long kept a secret in my own heart; and I applied myself to mental and spiritual culture.

"I was naturally possessed of some mechanical ingenuity, and this was the only talent that had been cultivated. I could then command good wages in the factory. A few months' labor procured the means for a few months' schooling. I commenced study in the Collegiate Institute in Brockport, N. Y., in the fall of 1842. I denied myself everything but the absolute necessities, and interrupted my studies only to procure the means to purchase necessary clothing, books, and pay tuition. If I got this much, I felt free to commence a term, and without it I could not. I boarded myself, and procured supplies as best I could out of school hours. I did not know how to economize, although I very much desired to do so; consequently I did not always make the best use of time and means. At the expiration of three years, I had accomplished only two years' schooling. During this time I had united with the regular Baptist church in Brockport. In the summer of 1845, circumstances arose which made it undesirable for me to continue my relation with that church. A history of those circumstances is too lengthy for insertion here. In August, 1845, I left Brockport with great depression of spirits. I started westward without any particular destination in mind. I landed in Cleveland, Ohio, and obtained employment in a factory near that city. The following winter I taught a district school in Columbia, and in the spring commenced studying in Oberlin. I remained here but one season. The next three years my principal employment was teaching: then a part of two years was spent in the seminary in Norwalk, Ohio. This finished my schooling. I was then in my twenty-ninth year, and began to feel that it was time I gave myself up wholly to the work I had had in view for nine years. I was connected at that time with the Baptist church in West Windsor, Richmond county, Ohio. Of this church I received a license to preach, but did not receive a pastorate for four years. My dependence was teaching. I preached occasionally at such times and places, as the Spirit and providence of God directed.

"On the fourth day of October, 1851, I married Mary Elizabeth Palmer, daughter of John E. and Elizabeth W. Palmer, who resided near Mansfield. November, 1855, I accepted a call to settle with the church in Henrietta, Ohio, as their pastor. This relation has continued uninterruptedly for the past twelve years. How much longer it will continue is known only to Him who has appointed me the work, and at whose bidding I go. E. M."

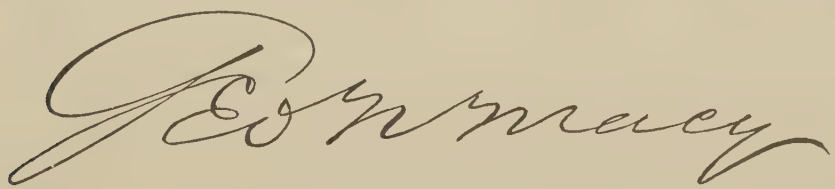
LOUISA, b. at Jamaica Plains, Mass., July 28, 1866; resides at Jamaica Plains, Mass. 1869



Mary M. Hayden was daughter of George C. Hayden and Phebe Swain, born at Nantucket, ; married at Nantucket, Feb. 16, 1863; resides at Jamaica Plains, Mass.

George N. Macy (1226), was educated at the Nantucket High School, and after receiving a liberal education, he removed to Boston in 1855, and entered into mercantile pursuits, which he followed until the commencement of the rebellion. His army life has been furnished by a friend who served with him, and as it contains so many matters of general interest, I give it in full instead of extracting from it. I have received many letters from officers of the army, speaking in very high terms of the character and bravery of Gen. Macy, from which I make some extracts as well as furnishing extracts from official reports.

The Twentieth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers was at this juncture, August, 1861, forming under the lead of Colonel W. Raymond Lee, a graduate of West Point, and a gentleman well known in and out of Boston, as an energetic and able man. Colonel Lee obtained from Governor Andrew the privilege of nominating his own officers. Among these was the subject of this memoir, who was ranked second in his class of first lieutenants. Many of the officers who left the state with the regiment subsequently attained distinction in the service, and besides General Macy, and Colonel Lee, who was promoted to be a brigadier general by brevet, we may mention Generals Palfrey, Bartlett, Peirson, Abbott, Hallowell, Whittier and Crowninshield.

The first permanent camp of the Twentieth, was near Poolesville, Maryland, and was called Camp Benson. Here, in the daily routine of camp duty, the regiment acquired that discipline for which it was always noted in the army. Picketing the river, occasionally with an alarm as to the enemy's intentions, was all the active duty required. The monotony of this life was, however, ere long rudely and terribly broken by the unfortunate battle of Balls Bluff. Our limits do not permit us to go at length into a description of this action. Suffice it to say, that a more injudicious scheme was hardly ever attempted. and that no scheme was ever carried out with less skill. The Twentieth, on Monday afternoon, the 21st of October, 1861, found themselves forming part of a line of battle, consisting of about 1,800 men, portions of different regiments, posted without advantage in open ground, the Potomac in their rear, no sufficient means for recrossing, at least an equal enemy in their front, and no competent officer in command. The enemy, concealed by the wood, kept up a murderous fire ; and, so far as could be supposed, suffered but little. No defenses of any kind were thrown up by our troops, no practical movements whatever attempted; even the two guns were so posted as to be worse than useless. The troops on both sides were green; our men, however, being in an enemy's country, and apparently exposed to defeat without an object, at last allowed the enemy — who had the immense advantages of fighting on their own soil, and also of a definite plan, that of driving the invaders into the river—to approach through the woods which skirted our left flank. Our line at last gave way at all points, but the Twentieth sturdily stood to the last; and Revere, Bartlett, Macy, and a few of the brave men strove in gallant but ineffectual attempts to drive back the pursuing foe. Night at last closed the action. Colonel Lee, Major Revere, Adjutant Pierson, and others were taken prisoners: three captains were severely wounded, one lieutenant mortally; several other officers slightly wounded, and the rank and file had lost heavily. Some of those, who were left with Bartlett at their head, got across the river in a boat. Others swam the river, and among them Lieutenant Macy. With two officers, Captain Babo, and Lieutenant Wesselhoeft, and two soldiers of his company, McKenna of Sandwich, and Worth of Nantucket, he dared the dangerous feat, and he alone reached the opposite shore. His four companions were all shot or drowned.

The great loss which the regiment had suffered in officers and men rendered a consolidation of the command necessary; and, upon the reorganization under Lieutenant Colonel Palfrey's direction, Lieutenant Macy was given the command of three companies, which he retained until his commission as captain arrived, dating from Ball's Bluff, when he was assigned to the largest company in the regiment, Company I. This company was composed chiefly of Nantucket men, recruited by Macy himself, and was unlike the other companies of the regiment in that it consisted chiefly of Americans. Nor did it possess this advantage only, for the seafaring population of the old whaling town produced a daring and hardy class of young men, well fitted to be soldiers. First in the ranks was the brave and lamented Alley. Curiously enough, too, this company was singularly fortunate in its officers, and it was at once ranked first among the ten companies of the regiment.

At the opening of the spring campaign of 1862, the Twentieth Regiment formed part of the Third brigade of the Second division of the Second corps, of the army of the Potomac. General Dana commanded the brigade, and that brave and much lamented officer, General John Sedgwick, the division. General Sumner had the corps, a veteran of sixty or seventy years, whose impetuous courage and fine soldierly traits made him felt and loved throughout his command.

Sedgwick's division was at first sent across the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, early in March, but soon returned without seeing the enemy. In the early part of April, it was sent to the Peninsula, and with the rest of the army under General McClellan, took part in the siege of Yorktown. On the evacuation of the enemy's lines on the fourth of May the divisions of Franklin and Sedgwick were sent up the York river in steamers to West Point, where an action of no great importance occurred. After some delay, the division arrived on the famous Chickahominy river. It was not long before the regiment had its second experience in battle — this time a successful one. On the 31st of May, Johnston, then in command of the rebel army, attacked the two corps of Keyes and Heintzleman, which had crossed the Chickahominy, and drove them in with considerable loss and confusion. Sumner, hearing the firing, put his corps under arms, and, late in the afternoon, crossed with Sedgwick's division and one battery. The troops encountered the enemy on the right of the rail road, about a mile east of the Nine Mile road. It was half-past five in the afternoon. After some few minutes of musketry fire, the enemy advanced to take the battery, which was posted on the right of our line, but were easily repulsed, and fell back in confusion. Sumner then ordered a charge of four regiments, of which the Twentieth was one, which was made in gallant style, the enemy giving way at all points, and leaving their position with their dead and wounded, in our hands. Here Brigadier General Pettigrew of South Carolina was captured, wounded, by Corporal Summerbages of Company I.

In the fighting which occurred the next day, the Twentieth was not actively engaged. For the next three weeks and more, the army lay on the Chickahominy, building intrenchments in their front, and exposed to harassing picket duty. At length, however, General Lee, who had succeeded Johnston in the command of the rebel army, commenced the manœuvre which forced General McClellan to abandon his position. In the action at Beaver Dam creek, and the battle of Gaine's Mill the Twentieth took no part; but early on Sunday morning, June 29th, Sedgwick's division broke camp and covered the retreat of the corps, and, in fact, of the army. In the action which took place that day at Peach Orchard, Captain Macy, in command of two companies on the picket line, made a very gallant stand against the advance of the enemy, and succeeded in driving them back. At Savage's station, later in the day, the regiment was not actively engaged. On the next day, however, at the fiercely contested battle of Glendale, or Nelson's farm, as it is sometimes called, it suffered severely. Sedgwick's division had been hurried up by General Sumner in person to retake the position from which the Pensylvania reserves, had after an obstinate resistance, been driven. The Third brigade came first upon the ground, the Twentieth headed the brigade.

Macy, with two companies, had the advance of the regiment. The advance was gallantly made under the immediate direction of General Sumner himself, who rode right behind the Twentieth Regiment; and, in the teeth of a terrible fire of artillery and infantry, by which the troops suffered severely, the line steadily advanced, and retook some of McCall's guns, which had been captured by the enemy. The position finally had to be abandoned, but the regiment well maintained its reputation in this sanguinary action, in which nearly 140 officers and men fell. That night the army retreated to Malvern hill, where on the next day was fought the great battle which bears that name. The army then fell back to Harrison's landing.

From this time till the middle of August, the troops lay quiet. The health of the regiment was not good. Many officers had gone home sick, others were disabled by wounds. Captain Macy, however, was on duty, and in command of two companies, did more than his full share of the work. With the rest of the Second corps the regiment arrived in the neighborhood of Washington just in time to see the close of the campaign of General Pope.

While the army was marching northward in September, to drive the enemy from Maryland, Captain Macy was sent to Washington on regimental business, and did not return in time to be present at the great battle of Antietam. His horse, jaded and worn out, could carry him only within sound of the cannon, and he missed this battle, the first action since the regiment was formed in which he had not shared. He arrived to find the regiment much changed. Colonel Lee commanded the brigade in the absence of General Dana, who had been wounded; Lieutenant Colonel Palfrey had been permanently disabled by a dangerous wound; Hallowell and Holmes had been severely injured; Surgeon Revere had been killed. The army lay for a few weeks in the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry, and then commenced the march which ended in December, at Falmouth. Colonel Lee, after a most gallant resistance to repeated attacks of severe sickness, was at length obliged to leave the field; and was succeeded in the command of the brigade by Colonel Norman T. Hall, a most gallant and meritorious officer. Such were Captain Macy's merits, that he was commissioned major over the heads of his seniors, and specially assigned to the command of the regiment by General Howard, who, in the absence of Sedgwick, who had been wounded at Antietam, commanded the division. Sumner still led the Second corps, but Burnside had superseded McClellan in the command of the army.

And now follows one of these great opportunities for military glory, which rarely happen in the history of any regiment, and which only those troops whose courage and steadiness have been often proved, perhaps on unsuccessful fields, and whose discipline has been perfected in the long interims of camp-life, can improve. General Burnside, having determined not only to throw large bodies of troops across the Rappahannock, below Fredericksburg, but to force the passage of the river in front of the town, found it impossible to lay his pontoon bridges in the face of the destructive fire of the enemy's sharpshooters, concealed in the buildings which skirted the opposite shore. It was suggested to him by General Hunt, chief of artillery, that troops might be thrown over in the pontoon boats; and Colonel Hall volunteered his brigade for the dangerous duty. The river here is about a quarter of a mile wide. The Seventh Michigan, Nineteenth and Twentieth Massachusetts sprang into the boats, and in spite of the enemy's fire, by which the brave Colonel Baxter of the first named regiment was wounded, pushed swiftly across, and speedily drove away the enemy's riflemen from their coverts. The bridge was completed without further delay. This gallant feat of arms had solved the question for the army; and performed, as it was, in the face of both armies, won, for the troops engaged, a high and well deserved reputation.

But the toughest struggle was yet to come—a struggle too in which no cloud of witnesses encouraged the combatants. The city had yet to be taken. The Seventh and Nineteenth were ordered to deploy on both sides of the street, which led from the bridge up into the town, while to Major Macy, with his gallant regiment, was given the honor of leading the column of attack. His orders were "to clear the city at all hazards, and cut the canal." The task was, indeed, an arduous one. The regiments on the flanks rendered but little assistance in dislodging the enemy; and the Twentieth advancing up the street in column, was exposed to a murderous fire from behind fences and walls, and from the windows of houses. The column steadily advanced, nevertheless; but the officers and men fell at every step. Cabot was killed, shot through the head; Shephard, Patten, Curtis, McKay and other officers were wounded; and in a little more than an hour, for it was late in the afternoon, and darkness soon closed the contest, ninety-seven officers and men out of about 200 which the regiment brought into action, lay killed or wounded in that short street. But the regiment held its own, and finally compelled the enemy, among whom, singularly enough, were several regiments, which at Ball's Bluff, in 1861, had driven the force of which the Twentieth formed a part, into the Potomac, to retire from the city, and to leave it in our undisputed possession. Rarely does the fortune of war reward valor more conspicuously than in this instance, when the Twentieth not only crossed a river in face of their old enemy, but succeeded at length in driving them from their strong position, after a determined and stubborn resistance. Of sixty men of Company I, that went into the fight, thirty-five were killed and wounded. They fought with daring and courage, for they recognized their opponents, and their cry was "Ball's Bluff."

That night Major Macy was relieved from his advanced position, and, being called to head-quarters, was highly complimented by General Howard and other officers. Few commanders could have held their men up to their work as well as he had done in that obstinately contested fight.

But the great battle of Fredericksburg had yet to be fought. On Saturday, the 13th of December, the brigade was ordered up the plank road, which crosses Marye's heights, to attack the enemy in position. Our limits do not admit of our doing more in the way of description, than merely to say, that these heights, on the south of the city, completely command all the open ground between them, and the city itself. Parallel with these heights, and at right angles with the roads, runs a canal; and the troops sent to make the assault must march by the flank or in column up the two or three roads which lead to the heights, and which cross this canal on bridges, and then deploy to the right and left beyond the canal; and this deployment must be made under a heavy fire and without cover. The Twentieth was the right regiment of the brigade and of the army; and when turning to the right it left the road to take its place in front the enemy's position, it had the largest distance to march. From the hills in front, the enemy were pouring down a terrible fire of shot and shell, while from the rifle-pits at their base came the murderous roll of musketry. The steadiness of the men had been somewhat shaken by the severity of the fire, to which, while on the road and in column, they had been subjected, and to which, of course, they had been entirely exposed; now they had to leave the road, and to march a third of a mile, still within close range of the enemy's fire, but not facing it, until having reached their allotted place, they were to form in line, and attack and carry the rifle-pits and hills above. This was the plan, at least; but it was a plan, which, we venture to say, could not be carried out. Macy had left his horse at the road, and led the troops on foot. The regiment, under a terrible fire with admirable steadiness, formed "on the left by files into line," and advanced with great gallantry. But a successful charge was out of the question. Some regiments on the left came to a stand or gave way, and, after one or two attempts, the troops were ordered to lie down, and so remained in a position from which they could not be withdrawn till night. The loss had been very severe. Here fell the brave Alley, a loss to the regiment never to be replaced. Three officers and some sixty men had fallen in this worse than injudicious attempt. Major Macy had done all with his command that man could do, and had won golden opinions from everybody; but he could not perform impossibilities. He was publicly thanked by General Howard, commanding the division, for the "noble conduct" of him and his regiment "in the late battles." Said an officer of the regiment, "Macy did splendidly. * * * His good judgment, bravery and perfect steadfastness deserve the very highest praise."

The long winter which followed the battle of Fredericksburg passed quietly, but very pleasantly. Under the admirable discipline of General Hooker, the army soon recovered entirely from the demoralization in which that officer found it. Among other well chosen measures which he adopted at that time was to allow a greater number of furloughs to the private soldiers of those regiments which were found to be the best in drill and discipline, than was allowed to the rest. Among these were the First, Nineteenth, and Twentieth Massachusetts. Officers also were allowed leaves of absence. Major Macy improved his chance at home to the best advantage. On the 16th of February, 1863, he was married to Miss Mary M. Hayden. Duty however, soon recalled him to the front. General Hooker had organized boards of officers to examine those officers whose fitness for the right discharge of their duties was questioned, and Major Macy was detailed on one of these courts. Unpleasant as must often have been the task, it was nevertheless one, which, faithfully performed as it was, rendered great service to the army by ridding it of many useless creatures unfit to hold a commission.

In the ill managed operations which General Hooker directed with the main army under his immediate command at Chancellorsville, the Twentieth had no share. The Second division of the Second corps, then commanded by Gibbon, who had succeeded Howard, was left at first at Falmouth; but when General Sedgwick with the Sixth corps carried the heights of Fredericksburg on the third of May, the division formed a part of the attacking force; and though it was not actively engaged in the assault, yet it was exposed to a severe artillery fire, from which the Twentieth lost two officers and several men killed and wounded. Sedgwick left Hall's brigade in charge of the town, and when the campaign was ingloriously ended, it recrossed to its old camp at Falmouth.

We come now to the memorable campaign of Gettysburg. General Lee, encouraged by his repeated successes, had determined to carry the war into the enemy's country, and finish the struggle by a decisive battle on northern ground. He had driven McClellan from the Peninsula, had forced Pope with great loss to Washington, had held his own with credit against a superior force at Antietam, had easily repulsed the assaults of Burnside upon Fredericksburg heights, had baffled the well conceived strategy of Hooker, and, by a series of most daring and brilliant movements had reduced that officer to a state of mind in which he had abandoned the campaign, and he now felt himself able to take the offensive in his turn, especially as the temper of his army was all that could be desired, and that his troops had formed a very high, and in fact an unwarranted estimate of their own prowess, as compared with that of their antagonists. We cannot follow the marches which preceded the great battle of Gettysburg; but undoubtedly they reflected credit on General Hooker's military ability. Fortunately, however, for the army, he was just before the battle superseded by General Meade.

On the night of the first day of July, 1863, after many weary marches, the Twentieth went into camp on the field of Gettysburg. The regiment was led by Revere, who had rejoined his command to take the colonelcy, Macy being commissioned lieutenant colonel. The previous day had seen the First and Eleventh corps defeated, after a gallant stand, by the advance columns of Lee's army, and the death of that excellent soldier, General Reynolds. That famous position, however, stretching from Culf's and Wolf's hills on the right, round by Cemetery hill on the centre, down to Little and Great Round Top on the extreme left, had been held, and was now being manned by the often defeated, but always stubborn and unconquerable battalions of the army of the Potomac.

The low ridge which stretches from Cemetery hill to Little Round Top, faces nearly west. Near Cemetery hill it was held by the troops of the First corps; then came Hancock, with the redoubtable Second corps, that corps which had done the hardest fighting in the army, and which had never lost a gun or a color; then came that dangerous gap in the line due to the error of General Sickles in throwing the Third corps out on the Emmittsburg road. The battle began about two in the afternoon by the fierce attack upon the

Third corps, which was driven in with great loss. The enemy pressed their advantage with great resolution, and the left of the Second corps was involved in the conflict, which was desperately fought on both sides. Though not engaged actively, and lying in the second line, the Twentieth suffered considerably, losing some forty or fifty officers and men, the brave Colonel Revere also being mortally wounded. But the great struggle, not the most critical, perhaps, but certainly the most striking and decisive in its results upon the troops engaged, was yet to come; and here, as at Nelson's farm, Antietam and Fredericksburg, the Twentieth was in the thickest of the fight. On Friday, the third of July, about one in the afternoon, the enemy opened upon us with a fire of more than a hundred pieces of cannon. That fire, replied to by our own batteries of nearly equal number, lasted two hours, and was the most terrible artillery fire of the war. Then the masses of the rebel infantry deployed from the woods some half or three-quarters of a mile opposite. The attack was to have been made in three columns: Heth's division, commanded by Pettigrew, on the left; Pickett's division in the centre, and Wilcox's brigade of Anderson's division on the right. Wilcox did not arrive on the ground until the other troops had been repulsed; Pettigrew and Pickett, however, advanced simultaneously. The former division, when in the open ground, wavered under the heavy fire, to which it was subjected, and broke, in spite of all efforts to rally it. But the veteran troops of Pickett, under that daring officer and his three gallant brigadiers, Armistead, Kemper, and Garnett, crossed the plain in perfect order, closing their ranks to fill up the great gaps made by our fire, and reached our position. That portion of their line in front of where Hall's brigade was posted, was withered as in a moment by the terrible fire of musketry. Macy ordered his men to hold their fire until the enemy were close upon them, when the regiment gave them such a volley as actually to clear their front. But a little further to our right, the rebel troops sternly forced their way in, and, seizing the cannon of our batteries, poured in a deadly fire upon the supporting brigades of Webb and Harrow. Hall, with great promptness, ordered his brigade up from the left, and told Colonel Macy to move his regiment to the right. The noise was deafening, scarcely an order was heard, for Pickett's men were fighting their best, and the roll of musketry was terrible. Macy seized the colors of the Twentieth, and carried them to the right, towards the close ring which was being formed around the rebel troops, at the same time ordering Abbott to bring up his men, and sending an officer to the left wing of the regiment to hurry up the left companies. That officer was wounded; but the officers of those companies, seeing the colonel with the regimental colors, hastily abandoned their position, and the whole regiment rushed up at the double quick, fixing bayonets as they moved, and poured in a deadly fire upon Pickett's ill-fated troops. The carnage was awful, both sides were fighting with desperation. One ball tore off one of Colonel Macy's shoulder straps; another struck his sword, and dashed off the blade; others passed through his clothes; finally two more tore his left hand to shreds and obliged him to leave the field, but he was not off the ground when the shout of victory went up. The enemy had been beaten, and in a few minutes the remnants of that gallant rebel division had either surrendered at discretion, or were endeavoring to escape across that dangerous field over which they had just now so bravely marched to the attack. The Twentieth had nobly done their part in this memorable contest; but at an unparalleled sacrifice. Three officers and less than a hundred men alone remained out of thirteen officers and more than two hundred men, who had entered this great battle.

Colonel Macy's left hand had been amputated on the field; and the same evening he was riding in an ambulance with General Gibbon — who had commanded the division and had also been wounded — to Westminster, on his way home. Here he was compelled to remain some three months; and he did not rejoin his command until just after the action at Bristoe Station, in October, 1863. He was with his regiment in the movement upon the enemy's position at Mine Run in December; but, though the army suffered a good deal from exposure, no other loss was sustained, as no attack was made.

In the ensuing winter, Colonel Macy — for by Revere's death he had succeeded to the colonelcy of the regiment — was detailed on recruiting service at home. Having at length brought the numbers of the regiment up to the required limit, he rejoined the army just as it had crossed the Rapidan for Grant's famous campaign.

The Second corps under Hancock had made a wide detour, and was for the time separated from the rest of the army, and Macy was obliged to rest satisfied in the first day of the great battle of the Wilderness, with acting as volunteer aid to General Sedgwick, commanding the Sixth corps. He found the Twentieth, however, that afternoon, as it was coming up to take its position with the rest of Gibbon's division, on the left of the line. On the next day, Friday, the sixth of May, 1864, the battle was renewed with great fierceness on both sides. It was a battle that cannot be well described.

It was fought in a forest, and in a forest of thickets. Macy's command was in good fighting trim. Rarely, if ever, had his veteran regiment gone into a battle in better spirits and condition, and never had it been better led. Macy, Abbott, Curtis, Patten, Perkins, Bond, Kelliher, and many other brave and experienced officers took their men into this terrible contest, with every determination to win. It is true that there were many recruits in the ranks, but there were some two or three hundred of the old veterans too, and these enabled the fresh troops to sustain with steadiness the shock of battle. For an hour and a half Hancock steadily advanded over the corpses of the men of A. P. Hill's command, driving back the enemy with great gallantry, but it was only to be driven back in his turn. For when Longstreet had, late in the forenoon, succeeded in getting his corps into position, and in organizing an attack on us, Hancock was forced back with great slaughter. Here Longstreet himself was wounded, and his advance was checked. The lines of battle swayed back and forth, and finally when night closed upon the combatants, Hancock retained but part of the ground won in the morning.

The Twentieth had suffered severely. Two hundred and forty officers and men had been killed and wounded. Colonel Macy had been shot through one leg, and had received a serious contusion on the other. Abbott, that gallant and brilliant soldier, had been mortally wounded; Perkins, Bond, and many other valuable officers wounded more or less severely. The regiment was left under the command of Curtis, who held it only for less than a fortnight, when he too was wounded at Spottsylvania. The command then fell to the brave and lamented Patten, who carried the regiment from Spottsylvania, through the battles at the North Anna, Tolopotamoy, Cold Harbor, and Petersburg, till, at Deep Bottom, on the 16th of August, he, too, was mortally wounded.

Colonel Macy's wound was slower in healing than he desired. He was not able to take the field again till the 14th of August. His first care was to relieve Major Patten, and a leave of absence was actually prepared; but, as will be shown, owing to Macy being himself wounded the same day of his return to command, Patten was obliged to remain, only to be mortally wounded on the next day but one. Colonel Macy arrived just as the second movement on the north side of the James was being made, and was at once assigned to the command of the First brigade of the Second division of the Second corps, and ordered to report to General Barlow, who commanded his own and this division. The same afternoon, the 14th of August, he was ordered to attack with his brigade a portion of the enemy's line at Deep Bottom. The position to be assailed was strong, and the distance to be traversed was considerable. Macy led the troops in the most gallant manner, mounted on a powerful black horse, which he had borrowed of General Barlow, his own having already been shot under him in making a dangerous reconnoissance of the ground. Half way across the plain, the enemy's fire being very severe, and it requiring the constant presence of Colonel Macy at all points to keep the line steadily advancing, his horse was struck, and, springing high in the air, fell heavily to the ground, his rider underneath. Fearfully crushed and bruised, Macy had yet force and spirit enough to extricate himself, and lead his troops on foot to the ravine, through which ran a stream, behind which the enemy was posted. Here his strength gave out, he fell insensible, and was with difficulty carried to the rear, where, notwithstanding every attention that the great skill of his old friend, Dr. Hayward, the surgeon of his regiment, could render, his life was, for some twenty-four hours, almost despaired of. But his naturally strong constitution at length prevailed, and he recovered so far as to be able to travel home.

He did not, however, get entirely over this severe injury until late in the fall. He soon received the commission of brevet brigadier general, to date from the 14th of August, 1864, for gallant conduct at the battle of the Wilderness and at Deep Bottom. On his return to the front, he was assigned to the command of a brigade, composed of ten New York regiments, which was attached to General Miles's (First) division of the Second corps; but he held this position only for a short time, being soon given the command of General Miles's old brigade, composed of the Fifth New Hampshire, Sixty-first New York, Twenty-sixth Michigan, Eighty-first, One hundred and fortieth and One hundred and Eighty-third Pennsylvania, and Second New York heavy artillery, some thirty-five hundred men in all, a brigade, which, under the able lead of that distinguished soldier, General Miles, had won a great reputation for itself in the army. But with the exception of a skirmish at Hatcher's Run in December, he saw no active service this winter.

In February, 1865, General Macy was prevailed upon to accept the position of provost marshal general of the army of the Potomac, at the personal request of General Meade. Loth, as he was, to exchange his fine command for this more laborious and more safe duty, he was induced to do so mainly by the conviction that the war was near its close, and that but little more hard fighting was to be expected. For this new position he was admirably fitted. His excellent business habits, his method and system, enabled him to perform its duties to the satisfaction of every one; while his perfect self-reliance and willingness to take responsibility, were very necessary traits in an officer, who is always left in so many things to his own discretion, as is the provost marshal general; and who, in this, the last campaign of the army of the Potomac, received under his command as prisoners a large part of the army of Northern Virginia. Accompanying, as he did, for a great part of the time during the campaign, the head-quarters of the army, he was brought into closer relations with the officers highest in rank, than he had ever been during his long career of hard service in the regiment; and he made everywhere a most favorable and permanent impression. His duties, which were arduous indeed — for portions of the army of General Lee, sometimes many thousand men, were captured almost every day during that exciting week — were thoroughly performed. Soon after the close of the war, he received the commission of major general by brevet, to date from the 9th of April, 1865, the day of the surrender, for "gallant and meritorious services."

On the first day of the great review in Washington, in June, 1865, the day when the army of the Potomac marched for the last time as an army, General Macy, at the head of the provost marshal's brigade, composed of cavalry and regular infantry, followed General Meade and his staff. Then by virtue of his position as provost marshal general, he took his place with the general and the high officers of the government, there to witness that noble and most imposing procession of the soldiers of the republic: first, the army of the Potomac; then, on the following day, the army under General Sherman. A proud position surely, and surely well earned. From Ball's Bluff to Appomattox Court House he had marched and fought. He had served through the peninsular campaign of General McClellan; had served in the dangers of the first and second attacks on Fredericksburg; had lost a hand at Gettysburg; had been wounded at the Wilderness and again on the James; but he had been preserved in all his perils; he had never lost a day by sickness; he had served long and faithfully, and he was now enjoying his reward. Starting as a first lieutenant, he had won his way by gallantry and efficiency to be a major general by brevet. Few men had done more for their country.

The army of the Potomac having been disbanded, Macy was one of the few officers retained in the provisional corps, then thought to be destined for Texas, and was assigned to a brigade under General Wright, who commanded the corps; but after this idea was abandoned, and no further hope of active service seemed to offer, he was mustered out of the service; and returned to his home, to engage again in the peaceful pursuits of business life.

"Gen. Macy.— In forwarding to General Macy his commission of brevet brigadier general for 'distinguished conduct at the battle of the Wilderness and at Deep Bottom,' General Meade says: 'It affords me great pleasure to be the medium of transmitting to you this mark of the recognition by the government, of the highly meritorious services you have rendered to the country, since I have had the honor to command the army of the Potomac."

The following extracts of letters were addressed to me, S. J. M.

Major General Meade writes: "He was my provost marshal general at the close of the war, and was selected by me on account of his brilliant military record and his high reputation as an officer, being always distinguished in battle, and very often seriously wounded."

General Barlow writes: "I am able to speak only as to the general report which prevailed in the army in regard to him. That spoke of him as an officer, very conspicuous for his gallantry, and distinguished for his skill and military qualities. On one occasion only did he come under my personal observation, and that was at Deep Bottom, Va., in August, 1864. He was in command of a brigade which attacked the enemy's works, under my command, he being sent to me for that day only. I saw him shot from his horse while urging on his men and exhibiting very conspicuous daring. He was the only officer who remained mounted under the severe fire of the enemy, thereby exposing himself in an unusual degree. In my official report of this affair, I remember that I commended him alone of all officers."

From the report of Brigadier General F. C. Barlow, commanding First division, Second army corps, of the operations of his division in July and August, 1864, at Deep Bottom, Va.:

[Extract.]

"* * * The whole division was not landed until broad daylight (of August 14th). * * * *

"I desire, however, to commend the great gallantry and good behavior of Colonel Macy, Twentieth Massachusetts Volunteers, who commanded the

First brigade of the Second division, in the attack above referred to. He did everything that a brave man and a soldier could do. * * *

General Burnside writes: "I only know him to have been a most excellent, gallant, efficient and loyal officer, who by his faithful services has endeared himself to all loyal people."

General Alexander S. Webb writes: "When I took command of the Second division, Second corps, I heard a great deal of General G. N. Macy, of the Twentieth Massachusetts, then Colonel Macy. Every one spoke of him as an accomplished officer of marked character. He did not, however, join my command until after the battle of Bristow station, October 14th, 1863. During the winter of '63 and '64, I saw a great deal of him, and from personal observation I was convinced that he was one of the best officers of his rank in the army of the Potomac. His intelligent discipline kept the Twentieth Massachusetts up to the high standard they had adopted under General Raymond Lee, and I was justly proud of him as an officer.

"He had then been badly wounded, and I knew from his reputation that he was brave. He did not fight under my eye until May 6, 1864. Then in the battle of the Wilderness he was shot in the leg. Shot in the head on the 12th inst., myself, I left the field for five months. When I returned as chief of staff of the army of the Potomac, Macy was with the Second division, Second corps, as brevet brigadier general and in command of it. General Meade made him provost marshal general, and a capital one he was."

William W. Macy enlisted as a private soldier in Co. C., 19th Regiment Indiana Infantry Vols., July 15, 1861. Mustered into U. S. service at Indianapolis, Ind., July 29, 1861, and was shortly after promoted to 5th duty sergeant. The regiment was ordered to Washington city, August 5, arrived there on the 9th, and was immediately assigned to duty with the grand army of the Potomac, forming part of the First brigade, First division and First army corps. The following year passed in the usual routine of camp life, until the battle of Cedar mountain, August 9, 1862. Then, under command of General Pope, they participated in the skirmishes with Stonewall Jackson, along the Rappahannock, and took an active part in the battles of Gainesville, 2nd Bull Run, South Mountain, and Antietam, in the latter of which Macy received his first battle scar in the shape of a "minie track," on his skull. He was in the battles of Fredericksburg, December 12 and 15, 1862; went into winter quarters at Belle Plain landing, December 18, 1862; mustered as 1st lieutenant, April 26, 1863; and took part in the engagements at Fitz Hugh crossing, April 28; at Chancellorsville, May 3; and at Gettysburg, July 1st and 4th 1863. On the morning of the 3d of July, just about daybreak, as he was lying asleep on the ground, he received another minie ball on his head, which proved more serious than the former one, but did not leave so ugly a scar. He was detailed November 1, 1863, to return to the state of Indiana, on recruiting service. He returned to duty with the regiment, February 24, 1864; was taken sick with small-pox, March 3; spent one month and a half in the hospital, and then had thirty days leave of absence to visit his parents, whom he had not seen since first joining the army. He rejoined his regiment at the Pamunky river, Va., June 1, 1864, after which he participated in the battles around Petersburg and Richmond. Was in line just to the left at the springing of the mine in front of Petersburg, July 29th, and participated in the battle of the Weldon R. R., August 18 and 21. The 19th Indiana Regiment was consolidated with the 20th Indiana Regiment October 19, 1864, and he was commissioned as captain of Co. A., 20th Regiment Indiana Veteran Vols., Dec. 14, 1864. Was in the battles of Hatches and Gravelly Run, and in the running fight after Lee's army from the evacuation of Richmond, until his surrender April 9, 1865. He was mustered out of service at Indianapolis, Ind., July 12, 1865, having served within three days of four years. By his bravery and skill he advanced from a private soldier to a captaincy. He has laid aside the sword, and is following commercial pursuits at Farmland, Ind., having rendered valuable service to his country.

Cyrus Macy (1770), removed with his parents from Ghent to Hudson in 1830. Was educated at Hudson, and at the age of twenty-two, in 1847, he removed to Nashville, Tenn., and became interested in the publication of a daily newspaper, then called the Nashville Orthopolitan. Was elected alderman for the municipality of South Nashville, in 1849, and, whilst holding that position he framed and succeeded in having passed the board of aldermen, an ordinance for the erection and maintenance of the first public school established in the state of Tennessee. Upon the election of Zachary Taylor as president of the United States, he received an appointment to a position in the department of the interior, and removed to Washington, D. C., in 1851. During his residence there he contemplated a similar undertaking to this, and made considerable progress, when he was so unfortunate as to have all his manuscript destroyed by the fire, which occurred in the congressional library in . The author never knew until the present time, of the fact that it was ever contemplated by any one else to write a genealogical history of the family, and regrets that the unfortunate fire should have deprived us of the valuable information collected by Cyrus Macy. After living in Washington three years, he returned to Hudson, N. Y., and engaged in the dry goods business. He at present holds the position of superintendent of public instruction for the city of Hudson, and is also president of the Franklin Library Association. The writer is indebted to him for much valuable assistance in obtaining information for this work, and is pleased here to record his sincere thanks.

THE JOB MACY HOUSE

Many an old house that has fallen into disrepair over the years has had the good fortune to be reclaimed by an interested purchaser from off the island. An exceptionally fortunate house is the Job Macy House at 11 Mill Street, facing south on the northwest corner at the intersection of New Dollar Lane, formerly Risdale Street. On an excellently landscaped lot, it has been sympathetically restored inside and out.

The house is said to have been built in the 1750's, a dating substantiated by details of the framing. Legend relates that the builder, Job Macy, incurred the wrath of his father who refused ever to enter the house since it had been built with two stories in front and rear instead of with a characteristic lean-to under a long, sloping roof in the rear. Anyone entering this attractive house can see that Job's father cut off his nose to spite his face.

The ell was added in 1832 when a master mariner, Joshua Coffin, bought the property. The house is one of the earlier examples of the truly typical Nantucket dwelling. Exterior views before (right) and after (left) restoration have been included to encourage prospective buyers of old houses who may be timid. Often such neglected houses look forlorn and hopeless; but if they are given understanding treatment, they can be restored to useful and beautiful lives.
